'Lured to her death by Vatican cardinal paedophile ring or kidnapped in revenge by Italy mobster?' Enduring mystery of girl, 15, who vanished on way home from flute class after Pope told family, 'She's in heaven'

- Emanuela Orlandi, 15, vanished without trace in Vatican City in July 1983
- The enduring mystery of her disappearance still haunts the Vatican today
- Theories include that she was kidnapped by a cardinal paedophile ring
- Another claim she was taken by mobster who lost tens of millions of dollars when Vatican-linked bank collapsed
- A Turkish anti-Christian group claimed they took Emanuela to secure release of Mehmet Ali Agca, who tried to kill Pope John Paul II in 1981
- Now case is closed and Pope Francis told her family: 'She's in heaven'

The mysterious disappearance of the 15-year-old daughter of a Vatican official is Italy's most enduring cold case.

Emanuela Orlandi vanished while on her way home from a flute lesson in July 1983, and was never seen again.

It sparked an international intrigue that has pointed to the Stasi, the Italian mob and even a Satanic sex cult among the cardinals.

The teenager, the fourth of five children in a devoutly Catholic family, was enticed to meet her abductors with the offer of some work distributing leaflets at a fashion show for Avon cosmetics.

In reality, the Avon job did not exist. No one has ever been convicted of her disappearance and no body has ever been found.

The original theory followed by investigators was that she was kidnapped to secure the release of the would-be assassin who tried to kill John Paul II.

But Vatican insiders have claimed that she died under the influence of drugs at a satanic sex party with prelates.

Others insist she was is still alive and living secretly in a convent with the knowledge of the Vatican.

In the latest investigation, prosecutors worked on the premise that Emanuela was kidnapped and killed by extreme right Italian mobsters who had lost tens of millions of dollars after they invested it in the troubled Vatican Bank.

A witness claimed said she saw the teenager's body, wrapped in a bin-bag, thrown into a cement mixer, in a seaside resort near Rome.

But now judges in Italy have controversially closed the decades-old case in what will seemingly remain one of the country's greatest unsolved mysteries.

Despite fierce opposition from the Orlandi family, investigators said there was not enough evidence to go to trial.

Today, in an exclusive interview Emanuela's brother Pietro told of his astonishment at the decision to bring to an end the family's 32-year quest for justice.

'We want to reach the truth, whatever it is,' he told MailOnline.

'There are still so many indications to investigate. I ask myself how, after so many years have passed, it is possible that there is no one on this earth with the courage to say what happened.'

The family has always hoped that Emanuela is still alive somewhere and have appealed to Pope Francis to open the Vatican files, shedding light on a shadowy hour in its history.

Peculiar: Emanuela's family has never given up hope of one day finding her alive. Newspapers were contacted days after her disappearance by a Turkish anti-Christian group who said they were holding her to negotiate the release of the man who tried to assassinate Pope John-Paul II in 1981

Heartbroken: Now judges in Italy have closed Judges have decided to close the 32-year unsolved mystery of Emanuela's disappearance, much to the disappointment of her family (pictured, her parents)

Anger: Following the decision to close the case, Emanuela's brother Pietro (centre) told Mail Online: 'We want to reach the truth, whatever it is'

But while Francis appears to have cleaned up the Vatican bank and promises to bring transparency to the church, he has refused to provide the family with the answers they need.

When the newly minted pope met the schoolgirl's mother Maria at a mass in 2013 he shook her hand and said: 'Emanuela is in heaven.'

Her brother Pietro, surprised, told the Pope: 'Until there is proof to the contrary, I live in hope that she's alive. And I hope you will help me find the truth.'

But the Pope repeated: 'She's in heaven.'

Since then, Pietro says, he has repeatedly tried to get an explanation from the Vatican but has not received a reply. 'I want to understand if she is dead or alive. He says she's dead now? How does he know?' he said.

The truth 'must come from the Vatican,' he said. 'She was a Vatican citizen. But they have never collaborated with investigators. They have always obstructed the investigation. They have behaved in a way that is completely unacceptable.'

"It must be a secret that weighs heavily on the church. I think that the case has been closed after 32 years because they still don't want to open the Pandora's Box"

Pietro Orlandi, Emanuela's brother
