unfortunates. 'Dumbiet' in its Waite English

strongest German sense is about the nearest thing to it. It is as if a geographer should criticise Gulliver's Travels from his own particular standpoint - When Levi says that all that he asserts as an initiate is subordinate to his humble Submissiveness as a Khan, and then remarks that the Bible and the Koran are different translations of the same book and treats the Incarnation as an allegory, it is evident that a good deal of submission will be required.

When he agrees with St. Augustine that a thing is not just because God wills it, but God wills it because it is just, he sees perfectly well that he is reducing God to a poetic image reflected from his own moral ideal of justice, & no amount of alleged orthodoxy can weigh against that statement. This very defence of the Catholic Hierarchy is a masterpiece. One must begin with One, and that one has no particular qualities. Therefore, so long as you have an authority properly centralized it does not really matter what that authority is. In the Pope we have such an authority ready made, & it is the gravest tactical blunder to endeavour to set up an authority opposed to him. Success in doing so means war, and failure.

anarchy. This, however, did not prevent Lévi from ceremonially casting a papal crown to the ground & crying "Death to tyranny and superstition" into the bosom of a secret Areopagus, of which he was the most famous member.
When a man becomes a magician he looks about him for a magical weapon, & being probably endowed with that human frailty called laziness he hopes to find a weapon ready made. Thus we find the Christian Magus who imposed his power upon the world taking the existing worship and making a simple system combining all their merits. There is no single feature in Christianity which has not been taken bodily from the worship of Isis, or of Mithyas, or of Bacchus, or of Adonis, or of Osiris. In modern times again we find Frater Iehi Aour trying to handle Buddhism. Others again have attempted to use Freemasonry – They have been even exceptionally foolish magicians who have tried to use a sword long since rusted. And Frater Iehi Aour Wagner illustrates this point only clearly in Siegfried. He

Great Sword Nothung has been broken; & it is the only weapon that can destroy the Gods. The dwarf Mime tries uselessly to mend it. When Siegfried comes he makes no such error. He melts its fragments and forges a new sword. In spite of the intense labour with which this Gods it is the best plan to adopt.

Dear Sirs

The mistake clearly arose through my illness which has kept me away. So long I find that I was in error with regard to the amount of £6-5/- and if I had received your reply I should have attended it, but I have not done so until today. I am sure you do not want to disturb the harmonious relations that have always existed between me and yours clients and I shall be pleased to pay the claim and half of the costs, if that will meet their views, leaving the question of any counter claim for advertising to be settled amicably at another time.

Yours faithfully,

Chiswick Press,

I should have sent it months ago but I was very ill in the spring and had to go away to for 6 weeks. I am only just back. I am better in health but worse in pocket and I want to ask you to let the matter stand over for a few weeks till I have had time to turn round.

Yours faithfully and
