Now I will explain the process of worshipping the nishkala, sakala and the sakala-nishkala forms in a temple whose main shrine is facing the west. The Adisaivas who are the householders are fully qualified for performing the temple worship meant for the benefit of the world. The temple worship meant for the benefit of the world should be systematically performed for the sustained growth of the Ruler and the country. Such worship is capable of yielding the worldly enjoyments and the final liberation.

Having got up in the early morning , completed the inevitable morning duties and purified himself, the Guru should take the ceremonial bath adhering to the concerned directions. In all the three sessions(morning, noon and evening) he should sip the water with the recital of the mantra which begins with ‘suryasca ma manyusca’ and in the same way he should sprinkle the water upon himself with the recital of ‘dadhigravnno’ and other mantras. He should offer the water holding his hand in ‘anjali mudra’ three times with the recital of ‘Om Bhurbhuvassuvah’. Then he should repeat the same mantra ten times.

grahabalyādikecānyat dvijānāṁ vihitam tu yat
kartavyaṁ vā nakartavyaṁ śaivaṁ āvaśyakam matam 	7

These should be done in each day without fail in order to attain and stabilize the quality of being a Brahmin. Activities such as the preparatory consecration(anushthana) laid down in the the Srutis and Smrutis, those related to the inevitable morning duties, purification, bath, acamana, worship to be done in the three sessions, tarpana, homa, bali to be offered in the houses and such other activities which are prescribed for the brahmins may or may not be done. But the essential activities ordained in the Saiva Agamas should be inevitably done in each day.

tripuṇḍraṁ bhasmanā kṛtvā sāndreṇa dhavalena ca 	9

Having performed the saiva sandhya, mantra japa, tarpana and others according to the rules prescribed in the Agama pertaining to his lineage, the Guru should go to the temple, clean his hands and feet and perform acamana . Then he should enter into the shrine and occupy the seat , being north-faced. Having taken the pure and white vibhuti, he should apply it on his forehead and other parts in such a way that the three stripes of vibhuti are closer to each other.

Having done the 'kara nyasa'(with the recital of samhita mantras), the priest should contemplate the presence of the resplendent seed letter 'hum' in the sushumna channel coursing through the center of the body, breath in and arrest the air at stomach so as to be without any movement and breath out with the recital of 'hum phat'. While breathing out, he should untie the five knots(present between the chakras) and should bring back the air with the recital of the same mantra. Holding the air to be in 'kumbhaka', he should grasp his 'jiva'(soul) with the recital of murti mantra(atma murtaye namah) and place it on the head of 'hum' letter. Then he should raise the breath up along with the jiva so as to reach the plane of 'dvadasnata' and unite his jiva with Siva who is present there. This is the process of uniting the jiva with Siva. Having effected such union, he should perform the purification of his gross and subtle body.

śodhyoparāga rahitaṁ kalāmātra vyavasthitam
vicintya divyadehārthaṁ amṛtaplāvanaṁ nayet 	16

Contemplating the five elements from earth to ether as related to the five kalas from nivritti to santayatita respectively and contemplating all of them as pervaded by the adhvās, he should purify those elements with which his body has been constituted. He should incinerate contemplatively those elements by meditating on the mutual discordance existing between the gross elements and purify them. This kind of purification associated with respective mandalas (geometrical forms) of the elements is known as ‘bhuta suddhi’. This purification should be done in such a way that the body is left out to be associated with essential kalas for which purification is not needed. Then, in order to obtain a luminous divine body fit enough for the worship, he should besprinkle the nectarine drops trickling down from the thousand-petalled lotus over the ashes of the incinerated body.

dhyātvā hr̥dyāsanaṁ tasmin mūrtyātmānaṁ samānayet
punarāplāvanaṁ kṛtvā karanyāsaṁ samārabhet 	18

Having meditated on ‘kundalini sakti’ which is in oneness with the nectarine form, he should contemplate that the body is drenched with the streams of nectar and is charged with the luminous kalas. Having designed contemplatively a seat within his heart, he should re-install his own self endowed with a divine form. Having once again sprinkled the nectarine drops over that form, he should do the ‘kara nyasa’.

kavacenāvakuṇṭhyātha sarvakarmasu yojayet 	20

Having besmeared sandal paste over the palms, he should purify them with the recital of kavaca mantra. Then he should identify the brahma mantras with the fingers and the netra mantra with the palm. Having identified the asana, murti and anga mantras with the fingers, he should identify the presence of Siva with the palm. For the sake of protecting the identified state(with Siva), he should do ‘avakunthana’ (encircling the hands) with the recital of kavaca mantra. Only after having designed his hands to be of the nature of siva-mantras (which constitute the form of Siva), he should use his hands to do all other ritualistic activities related to the worship of Lord Siva.

The process of kara nyasa has been told. Then, the process of anga nyasa is now explained. The Guru should identify the brahma mantras and the anga mantras with his whole body, from the head to feet. Or, he may identify the mula mantra, brahma mantras and the thirty-eight kala mantras. Having installed Lord Siva within the heart, he should identify the hrudaya and other anga mantras with the heart and other limbs of the form. He should identify the netra mantra with the eyes and the kavaca mantra in all directions around him. Then he should display the ‘maha mudra’ to ensure his oneness with Siva and recite the mula mantra.

Or, he may do the nyasa of brahma mantras alone , without doing the nyasa of thirty-eight kala mantras. Then he should do the nyasa of 51 letters, each letter associated with corresponding Rudra and Rudra Sakti, Srikantha Rudra, (Purnodari Sakti) and others. He may do the nyasa of 51 letters without Rudra and Rudra Sakti.

Having designed his form to be in perfect oneness with the form of Siva, he should perform the internal worship. Worship, oblations and samadhi(being in absorbed state) should be done in the heart, navel and the forehead respectively. This is considered to be the purification of the self. Then, the purification of the place should be performed.

He should strike over the left palm with three fingers of the right palm and do the control of the directions (digbandhana) and perform the avakunthana. O, the Sages!, he should place the concerned vessels for padya, acamana and others over the pedestals specially designed for the purpose and prepare the padya, acamana and arghya water.

The padya prepared with candana, usira, siddhartha, durva, kasmira and water is considered to be of superior kind. The padya prepared with candana, usira, siddhartha, durva and water is of medium variety. The padya associated with candana, usira and water is of inferior kind. The acamana prepared with varala, usira, karpura, tuti, jati, lavanga and mura is considered to be of supreme kind. The acamana associated with ela, lavanga, karpura, mura and jati is of medium variety. The acmana prepared with ela, lavanga, karpura and water is of inferior kind. The arghya prepared with water, milk, tips of kusa-grass, yava, akshata, tila, saali and siddhartha is considered to be of superior kind. The arghya associated with yava, sarshapa, saali and tandula is of medium variety. The arghya associated with saali and tandula is of inferior kind. The preparation of padya and others is told now in another way.

Siddhartha, candana, usira and durva may be taken for the padya. Ela, lavanga, karpura, varala and phala are recommended for the preparation of acamaniya. These should be utilized for the worship, considering that these belong to the essential parts of a perfect and complete worship. The substances told earlier for the preparation of padya and others or those told here may be taken. The arghya may be prepared with either five substances – yava, sarshapa, vrihi, tandula and akshata, or it may be prepared with three substances – vrihi, tandula and akshata. Or, if no such substance is available, the argya may be prepared with pure water alone.

The vessel should be placed with the recital of hrudaya mantra and the Guru should take the arghya water with the recital of hrudaya mantra and sprinkle over the collected paraphernalia with the recital of astra mantra. He should provide protection(avakunthana) with the recital of kavaca mantra and energize each substance with hrudaya and other mantras and instill the quality of nectar into them by displaying the amruta mudra. Having applied a tilaka in his forehead with candana, he should place a flower on his own head. This is the process of the purification of paraphernalia. All the mantras related to Sivapuja should be recited as beginning with Om and ending with ‘namah’(raising the breath upto forehead or brahmarandhra). Such recital is known as the purification of the mantras.

Having taken the vessel containing the samanya-arghya, the Guru should worship the Bull installed in front of the main shrine. On the upper beam of the threshold, he should worship Ganesa and Sarasvati on the left and right side. Nandi and Ganga should be worshipped on the right side. Mahakala and Yamuna should be worshipped on the left side of the entrance. On right and left of the doorleaf, Vimala and Subahu should be worshipped. Having entered the shrine, placing the right foot first, he should worship the Astra Deva contemplating his presence at the threshold.

Then, having worshipped Vastoshpati(Main Deity of the temple site ,in the south-west), he should honor the flowers and other items offered to Sivalinga during the previous puja, remove them with the accompaniment of mantra and mudra and offer them to Candesvara. The well-learned Guru should sprinkle the arghya water over the pedestal and the rudra-bhaga. Such ritual is known as the purification of the Linga. In this way, five kinds of purification have been told.

Or, the five kinds of purification may be done after worshipping the guardian Deities of the entrance. The worship of Lord Siva associated with five kinds of perfect purification, designing of the seat, sacramental rituals, offerings and realizing a consummate state of complete worship is capable accomplishing all the desired fruits.

vāmādi nava sūryādi maṇḍalam seśvaram yajet ।
śivāsanaṁ tadante ca yajet svasvamanuṁ smaran	48

Earlier, the process of perfect purification has been told. Now, details about the seat of Lord Siva are explained. Geansa, Sapta Gurus, Ananta, Dharma and others, Adharma and others, the lower knot, upper knot, lotus, pericarp of the lotus, Vama and other Saktis(Nava Saktis), four mandlas –surya, candra, agni and sakthi, the presiding Deities of these mandalas – these are to be worshipped with the accompaniment of the mantra pertaining to each Deity. In the end, the sivasana should be worshipped collectively.

padmam vaidyeśvaram padmamaṇḍalam vimalāsanam ।
snānāvāhana kālādau pṛthak ekān prakalpayet	51

The Sivasana, which is essentially only one, consists within itself five kinds of seat. Anantasana consists of Adharasakti and Ananta. Dharma and others and Adharma and others, together with the lower and upper knots constitute the simhasana. The lotus representing the maya constitutes the yogasana. The petals of the lotus constitute the padmasana. The mandalas contemplated over the lotus constitute the vimalasana. Each seat pertaining to the ceremonial ablution, invocation and other such rituals should be ideated separately, while performing that ritual.

The seat of Lord Siva to be ideated for the worship should be conceived in this way. The Guru should ideate the presence of ‘vidya deha’ above this seat. Then he should identify the brahma mantras, anga mantras and thirty-eight kala mantras. He may do the lipi-nyasa either associated with Srikantha and others or not associated with them. Then he should identify the five vedic brhama mantras(isanassarva vidyanam and others) in association with thirty-eight kalas. Having ideated the vidya deha in this way, the Guru should invoke the presence of Lord Siva in that vidya deha.

Then he should do sthapana, sannidhana, sannirodha with the accompaniment of relevant mudras and identify the hrudaya mantra and others with the respective parts of the vidya deha, in the due order. Having installed Lord Siva within the vidya deha, the Guru should contemplate the perfect oneness of Siva and the vidya deha. Displaying the 'mahamudra', he should contemplate the vibrant presence of Lord Siva being identical with the vidya deha and his own self. Then he should offer padya, acamana, arghya, durva and other such substances to the Lord. Then he should worship Lord Siva with the accompaniment of sacramental rituals said to be ten in number and with all kinds of upacaras.

He should apply perfumes , sandal and others to the Linga. Sandal may be applied so as to give a pleasant look. He should offer various kinds of flowers, freshly obtained from the trees and plants. Incense(dhupa) may be offered with the mixture of laghu(a kind of root), sandal, niryasa and such others. He should offer the lighted lamps making use of sesame oil or ghee according to the desire of the sponsor(karta or yajamana). In the same way, he should offer the lamps which could shed light without getting extinguished.

Balls of rice cooked in the consecrated fire and mixed with mudga or adhaka powder is recommended for the offering of ‘amantrana havis’ (cooked rice to be offered addressing the Main Deity). Having adorned the Linga with various ornaments and others, he should again offer dhupa and dipa (incense and light). At that time, he should delight the Lord who is holding the bull-flag with the recital of auspicious musical songs, accompanied by the sounding of all kinds of musical instruments and various kinds of dance. At the end of the offering of dhupa and dipa, he should offer ‘aratrika’ (waving of five plates holding the light). Taking the bhasma mixed with perfumes with thumb and the ring finger, he should wave around in front of the Linga and through it away (towards north-east). Then he should apply a tilaka with the bhasma on the forehead of Siva. Following this, he should show the mirror, parasol, camara and others.

In the night, he should offer ‘nirajana’ (waving of lighted camphor, lighted wick) at the end of dhupa and dipa. After the offering of naivedya, he should offer the ‘maha havis’, bali and oblations. Bali and homa may be offered at the time of offering the ‘amantrana havis’. Or, bali and homa may be offered on both the occasions – amantrana havis and maha havis. Or, bali and homa may be offered separately.

While performing the ceremonial ablutions for the Lord, recital of the mantras, musical songs or hymns, playing of vina, recital of the Vedic suktas and the recital of other hymns and other songs should be undertaken. Consequent to these, musical songs rendered in Gauda and other languages should be recited upto the offering of dhupa. In continuation of these, musical songs rendered in Dravida and other languages should be recited accompanied by dance or without such dance. Musical songs of Sanskrit and Apabhramsa associated with various intonations and the musical songs rendered in 18 languages should be recited. Various types of dance belonging to various places and traditions should be performed. During the special kinds of festivals and other such specific occasions, songs of various traditions should be sung.

Then, the daily festival should be performed associated with a number of young women. Ladies endowed with charming form and grace of youthfulness may be invited for this according to the desire of the sponsor(karta or yajamana). If Rudra Kanyas who are considered to be my devotees are there, they could be directed to involve themselves in this daily festival. The number of such Rudra Kanyas should be according to the number of people in the village who are living there in accordance with the design of the village.

According to the procedure of daily festival, the Guru who is the foremost among those who have mastered the scriptures should decide over the number of musicians and the number of dance-patterns. At the completion of the daily festival, he should arrange for the performance of ‘suddha nrutta’. Then, he should offer the culukodaka(offering of handful of water) and do the visrajana(bidding of farewell to the Lord). Or, he may retain the presence of anga-devatas(Lords of anga mantras).

In order to enable a sadhaka gain the desired fruits resulting from a sadhana undertaken by him, the Guru should grasp the benefits of the Sivapuja from the Linga into his heart, then purify the Linga and again worship Lord Siva with perfumes, sandal and others for the sake of that devotee. This ritual need not be done daily; upon the completion of a particular sadhana, this may be done as desired by the sadhaka.

My worship is of three kinds – the foremost, the medium and the lower. The worship performed with the recital of only those mantras which have been revealed in the Saivagamas is considered to be the foremost kind of worship. The worship performed with the recital of Agamic mantras and the Vedic mantras is of medium type. The worship performed with the recital of Veda mantras only is considered to be of lower kind.

tadārtham bījatatsthāne viniyogaṁ niyojayet 	79
bījāṇu sadṛśo nāsti mamaprītikaraḥ paraḥ

This procedure has been detailed so as to be applicable for the daily and occasional worship. There is no mantra equal to the Saivamantra in all the three worlds. Even in the realm of Saivamantras, the mulamantra of Lord Siva shines forth as the seed of all mantras and is declared to be the foremost mantra. All the mantras, Pranava and others, millions of mantras composed of letters are born of this Siva-bijamantra. Sri Rudra and other hymns are likewise have born of Siva-bijamantra. In view of such importance, it is ordained that Guru should employ the bijamantra according to the context in the course of the repetition of other mantras to derive the concerned benefits. In yielding contentment and delight to me, there is nothing comparable to the bijamantra.

All these directions are common to the temple in which the Sivalinga, Sakala Linga and Misra Linga are facing the east, south or north. But there are some specific rules to be observed in the case of Sivalinga or other Linga installed in the main shrine facing the west. O, the Lords of the learned Sages!, now listen to these directions.

devavanmukhasaṁyuktā dvihastaika mukhānvitā 	83

All the procedures explained before are common for the west-facing temple. But certain specific directions have to be observed. The upper face of Lord Sadasiva should be conceived as looking towards the west-entrance. Manonmani may be invoked to be present either in the left or right side of the Linga. Manonmani has to be contemplated as associated with one face and two hands and looking the same direction as the Lord.

The presence of hrudaya mantra may be conceived to be in the south-east or the north-west. The presence of siro mantra may be conceived to be in the north-east or the south-west. The presence of sikha mantra may be conceived to be in the south-west or the north-east. The presence of kavaca mantra may be conceived to be in the north-west or the south-east. Both in the east facing shrine and in the west facing shrine, the astra mantra may be worshipped as present in all the four directions.

The Bull, Trident , Dhvajastambha and Gopura should be in front of the main shrine in which Sivalinga is facing the west. The worship of the retinue Deities should be done, starting from the east and ending with the north-east. Or, it may be done, starting from the west and ending with the south-west. The gomukha of the west-facing Linga should be on the left side of the Linga , extending towards the north. Candesvara should be worshipped in the north-east and Ganesa should be worshipped in the south-west. All other rules are common, as told for the Sivalinga facing the east.

I will explain the process of worshipping the Linga which is facing the south. Such worship is considered to be of three kinds. This may done for the Linga, Pratima(image) and Mukhalinga. If the pratima is facing the south, it is ascertained to be the foremost of the superior type(uttamottama). If the Mukhalinga is facing the south, it is considered to be of medium type. The worship being done for the Sivalinga facing the south is considered to be of lower type.

3

O, the twice-born Sages!, among the images, the image facing the south is the best and the worship being done to such image is thought of to be highly auspicious. Especailly, the form of Nataraja facing the south is more specifically considered to be the most auspicious one.

avyaktaṁ mokṣadam liṅgam vyaktaṁ bhūtipradāyakam

bhuktimuktipradam miśram evaṁ jñātvā samācaret

The Sivalinga which is facing the west is of the foremost type. The image which is facing the south is of the superior type. The regular worship of avykatalinga(Sivalinga) would yield liberation; that of the image is capable of yielding the worldly enjoyments; and that of the mukhalinga is capable of granting both the worldly enjoyments and the liberation. Having known well the greatness of such worship, one should perform the regular worship.

Having completed the activities such as morning purification, acamana, ceremonial bath, sandhya-worship and others, the Guru, holding the arghya-vessel in his hand, should reach the south entrance. Having sprinkled the arghya water over the entrance, he should worship the guardian Deities of the entrance in the prescribed order. Then he should worship Ganesa and Sarasvati on the upper beam of the threshold, Gqanga and Nandi in the right side of the entrance and Yamuna and Mahakala in the left side of the entrance. He should worship these Deities with perfumes, sandal and such other substances in the due order.

puruṣam vātha vāmaṁ vā pūrvasmin saṁprajayet
īśānam agnideśe tu nyaset pūrve manonmanīm 	11

Having entered into the shrine, the Guru should worship the Vastubrahma and being east-faced, he should worship Lord Siva endowed with six supreme qualities. If it is the worship of Sivalinga, the procedure is the same as told earlier. The Isana should be conceived to be in its own direction(north-east). He may worship either Aghora or Tatpurusha in the south; Aghora or Sadyojata in the west; Sadyojata or Vamadeva in the north; Tatpurusha or Vamadeva in the east. He should invoke the presence of Isana in the south-east and that of Manomni, in the east.

He should conceive the presence of hrudaya and other mantras in the south-west, north-west, south-east and the north-east respectively. Or, they may be conceived as explained before. The Vidyasvaras should be worshipped, starting from the south and ending with the south-east. The Ganesvaras may be worshipped starting from the east or as told earlier. The Lokapalas(Indra and others) should be worshipped, starting from the east and similarly, the weapons(Vajra and others) should be worshipped starting from the east.

The Bull, Balipitha , Dhvajastambha and others should be worshipped in the south, in front of the main shrine, the procedure of worship being the same as told before. All other rules are to be observed as explained earlier. If the worship is to be done for the Linga, these are the directions. For the worship of the Image(fully manifested form), the procedure is now told briefly. O, the foremost among the Sages!, listen to these directions.

Images are made of metal, stone, earth(clay), metallic ore, gems and such others. In the half-relief images and in the images made of stone, the worship may be done in the same way it is done for the Mulalinga. With regard to the images made of gems, metals and baked images made of clay, the purification of the image associated with dust may be done in any day as desired by the sadhaka. It should be purified until all the dust on the image gets removed. Then it should be cleanly wiped with a cloth. Ceremonial ablution should be done for the image in an auspicious day. In the images meant for specific purposes and others, image made of gems and provided with pedestal, or in the bana-linga or in the mirror and others, the worship may be done in the same way.

sampūjya hr̥tpuṭe netramantram vidyātanau smaret

Adharasakti, Ananta, Dharma and others, Adharma and others, Four Lions, lower knot, upper knot, lotus, pericarp, Nine Saktis – Vama and others, four mandalas – surya and others associated with their presiding Deities – having worshipped all these in the prescribed order, the sadhaka should ideate the presence of netra mantra and vidya deha within the heart of the image.

In the fully manifested form(sakala murti), he should identify Isana with the head; Tatpuruṣa with the face. All other nyasas are common, as prescribed for the worship of Sivalinga. For the images, the kala-nyasa has been set forth with specific details. The contemplation on the exact form of the Deity should be done as detailed in the section dealing with the lineaments of the images.

The sixth seed letter should be united with the fifth letter counting from the seed letter of the heart and pronounced upto three matras(3 seconds). This is known as the seed letter of the image(Om ham hum haum) and this should be placed on the head of the image. Reciting this mantra, he should contemplate the exact form of the image within his heart. Having brought out the form from the heart, he should install the image through process of nyasa and perform ‘sannidhana’, ‘sannirodha’ with the accompaniment of relevant mudras. Then he should offer the padya-water at the feet of the Deity(image).

O, the twice-born Sages!, the acamana should be prepared with siddhartha, candana, usira, durva, ela , lavanga, karpura, varala and phala(jati). This acamana should be offered to the face known as Tatpuruṣa. The arghya should be prepared with milk, siddhartha, sasyendra, sesame, sali and akshata and it should be associated with kusa and flowers. This arghya should be offered at the head. Arghya prepared with yava, sarshapa, vrihi and tandula is known as arghyaka. The arghya prepared with vrihi and tandula is known as acyuta.

Padya, acamana, arghya, arghyaka and acyuta – all these five are recommended for the worship of sakala, nishkala and sakala-nishkala forms. During the performance of arcana, snapana, yajna, festivals such as pavitrotsava(offering thread-garlands to the installed images to alleviate the defects) and others, these five should be prepared and offered. Or, the first three may be offered.

With regard to padya and others, that which is associated with all the recommended substances is considered be the foremost. That which is bereft of any one of the recommended substances is considered to be of medium kind. That which is bereft of two substances is of lower kind. That which is bereft of three substances is of the most inferior kind. Padya and others are applicable to all the entrances, irrespective of their directions.

Within the duration of seven and a half nadis(one yama, 3 hours), sandhya worship, snapana, daily worship, naivedya, bali, fire-ritual, daily festival and suddha nṛtta(dance performance) should be completed. This is the time schedule ordained for the normal course of puja. The aspects of puja such as padya, acamana and others may be performed by exceeding the prescribed duration by 2 or 3 divisions or a little; or, they may be performed with the prescribed duration decreased by 5 divisions or one division. The puja may be completed within five nadis or seven and a half nadis(one nadi is equal to 24 minutes).

A puja performed with a duration of 6 hours is considered to be the foremost among the supreme kind(uttama-uttama). The puja performed with a duration of 4 hours is considered to be of medium kind. The puja performed with a duration of 3 hours(one yama) is considered to be of lower kind. The duration between the beginning and the end of puja should be divided into 8 equal parts and based on these, nine internal durations should be derived. Such divisions should be applied to various aspects of the puja.

The Guru should perform the worship of sakala murtis and nishkala murtis, after having well analyzed in a systematic way the procedure set forth in this Agama and having pondered over the concerned sections. The foremost Guru should perform the worship of the Linga which is facing the north in the same way, after knowing well the rules set forth here. In the case of sakala murtis(vyakta linga, fully manifested form), it is specifically directed that the frontal hall(antrala) should be in the east.

What is the use of speaking elaborately on this? O, the foremost among the twice-borns!, it is ascertained that the direction towards which the image is facing should be taken to be the east. Based on this, other directions should be considered by those who have known well about the science of directions.

3 Directions for the Worship of Sakala Murtis(Fully Manifested Forms)

vakṣyehaṁ sakalārcāṁ tu sarvābhīṣṭa phalapradāṁ
śaucamācamanaṁ snānaṁ sandhyāvandana tarpaṇam 	1
kṛtvā praviśya harmyantu pādaśaucaṁ vidhāya ca
samyagācamya saṁgrahyabhasitaṁ vāriṇā saha 	2
tripuṇḍraṁ vidhinā kṛtvā karanyāsaṁ vidhāya ca
tatkareṇa ca saṁyojya śivehyātmānaṁ ādarāt 	3

Now I will explain the process of worshipping the sakala murti(fully manifested from). Such worship is efficacious in yielding all the desired fruits. Having completed the normal course of activities such as the morning purification, acamana, ceremonial bath, sandhya-worship, tarpana and others, the Guru should enter the temple and clean his feet. Having done acamana, he should take the vibhuti along with water, apply three stripes of vibhuti over the recommended parts of the body and do the ‘kara nyasa’. Having rendered his hands to be with the qualities of Siva, he should contemplate his total identity with Lord Siva, with utmost devotion.

भूतशुद्धिं सुधाप्लावं आत्मावाहनं एव च।

svavigrahe kalānyāsaṁ īśānaṁ mūrdhni vinyaset
puruṣaṁ vadane sarvaṁ mālāmantram anusmaran 	5

Purification of the gross and subtle body, sprinkling of nectarine drops, re-installing of the self, kara-nyasa and anga-nyasa – all these should be done as usual. The nyasa of brahma mantras should be done starting from the isana mantra. Kala-nyasa should be done in his own body. Isana should be identified with the head and Tatpurusha, with the face. Kala-nyasa should be done with the recital of mala-mantra pertaining to the sakala murti.

7

All other nyasas are common as explained earlier. But, for the worship of sakala murti, the nyasa of 31 kala mantras has been ordained. Having done this nyasa of 31 kala-mantras, he should perform the the internal sacrifice and worship and do the ‘purification of the place’ (sthana suddhi). He should prepare the visesha-arghya so as to be associated with perfumes, flowers and akshata. Through four kinds of activities – nirikshana, prokshana, abhyukshana and tadana – he should consecrate the visesha arghya and as told before, he should do the ‘purification of the substances’ arranged for the worship.

9

Having effected perfect oneness of his self with the Sakala murti and worshipped himself, he should do the purification of the mantras. Having sprinkled the arghya-water over the entrance with the recital of astra mantra, he should worship the Bull installed in front of the shrine. Then he should worship Ganesa and Sarasvati on the left and right side of the upper beam of the threshold. He should worship Nandi and Ganga on the right side of the entrance and Mahakala and Yamuna on the left side of the entrance.

śivasyeśāna mantreṇa mālādyam apañīya ca
śuddhim kṛtvā vidhānena paṭādyairvodakena vā 	11

Having worshipped astra-deva on the threshold, he should enter into the shrine and worship the Vastu Brahma by offering flowers to him. Then, having offered the arghya-water on the head of the Lord , he should remove the garlands and others offered to the Lord previously with the recital of isana mantra. The he should purify the image either with clothes and others or with pure water, according to the prescribed manner.

आधाराख्यं अनन्तं च धर्माधर्माद्यं एव च।

vāmādyam hṛdayopetaṃ śivāsanamanusmaran
tasminmūrtim samāvāhya vidyādehaṃ prakalpayet 	13

Adharasakti, Ananta, Dharma and others, Adharma and others, the lower knot, the upper knot, lotus, pericarp, the host of Saktis - Vama and others – all these should be worshipped with the recital of hrudaya mantra and the mantras pertaining to the seat of Lord Siva. Having invoked the presence of the Sakala Murti, he should ideate the manifestation of the vidya deha.

सदाशिवो महेशश्च रुद्रश्चेति त्रिधा मतः।

sadāśivo maheśaśca rudraśceti tridhā mataḥ
śivadeha iti prokto vidyādehassa ucyate 	14
yātasya vimalāśaktiśśivasya samavāyinī
saivamūrtiḥ kriyādehāt sadāśiva tanurmatā 	15
tathā maheśvarī mūrtiḥ kintu saumyasvarūpiṇī
āsaṁ kuṇḍalinī śaktiḥ kriyākhyānāntu kāraṇam 	16

Sadasiva, Mahesa and Rudra – all these three constitute the ‘siva deha’. It is specifically called ‘vidya deha’. Sivasakti who is exceedingly pure and known as Vimala Sakti is in inseparable union with Siva. The same Sivasakti assumes the form of Kriyasakti, and through this Kriyasakti assumes the body of Sadasiva. The same Sivasakti assumes the form of Mahesvari who appears with benign and charming form. Kundalini Sakti is the source for the activities of these Saktis.

brahma viṣṇośca mūrtistu māyākāraṇam iṣyate
rudraiśvara sadeśānām kriyākhyā tanukāriṇī 	18

Brahma, Vishnu, Rudra, Mahesa and Sadasiva – all these five are known as the Karana Devas(Chief Lords) and they are specifically called “Kshetrajnas”. For the body of Brahma and Vishnu, the pure maya is the causal source. For the body of Rudra, Mahesa and Sadasiva, Kriyasakti is the causal source.

tasmāt jñānamayodehaśśivasya parikīrtitāḥ 	19
taddehatraya siddhyartham mūrtimādau prakalpayet

In this way, the body of Siva is formed of three kinds of forms –Rudra, Mahesa and Sadasiva. Therefore, the body of Siva is declared to be of the nature of consciousness. In order to bring out these three kinds of bodies, the Guru should first contemplate and install the Vidya deha.

sadeśadeha siddhyartham aṣṭatrimśatkalā matāḥ 	21
rudreśayośśarīrārtham ekatrimśatkalā matā
aṣṭatrimśatkalānyāsaṁ prāgeva pratipāditam 	22

Having installed the vidya deha with the recital of ‘hum’ placing it between two hrudaya bijas, he should identify the brahma mantras with that form. Then he should do the kala-nyasa, the procedure of which is told here. In order to bring out the form of Sadasiva, the nyasa of thirty-eight kala mantras should be done. But, in order to bring out the form of Rudra and Mahesa, the nyasa of thirty-one kala mantras should be done. The procedure of doing the nyasa of thirty-eight kala mantras has already been explained.

एकत्रिंशत्कलान्यासे विशेषः कश्चिदिष्यते।

ekatrimśatkalānyāse viśeṣaḥ kaścidiṣyate

tatreśānavaktreṇa manunā sakalena ca
mālātmanā viśiṣṭantu pūrvavat parikalpayet 	24

In the process of the nyasa of thirty-one kala mantras, there is some specific feature. For the form of Rudra and Mahesa, there is only one head and only one face. Therefore, the nyasa of isana murdha and tatpuruṣa vaktra should be done after uniting these with the constituent mantras of the mala mantra. The whole form of the Sakala Murti should be ideated as constituted of the mala mantras variegated into 31 parts. This nyasa should be done as explained before.

Having contemplated the form of Sadasiva, he should recite the murti mantra. The letter 'ha' should be united with the fourteenth vowel and then with the sixth letter. Having joined the bindu and nada at the end, the seed letter 'ha' should be placed between two hrudaya bijas. This is the mantra for the invoking the presence of vidya deha.(Om ham hum ham haum vidya dehaya namah- this is the mantra). This should be done for the form of Sadasiva or Sivalinga.

The form of Mahesa, Natesa and others should be contemplated as described in the section dealing with the features of images. Uniting the seed letter 'ham' with the respective mantra of the Mahesa form, he should recite the murti mantra. The form of Kalasamhara, Gajasamhara and others should be contemplated, reciting the seed letter related to Rudras. Uniting this seed letter with the respective mantra of the Rudra-form, he should contemplate the presence of the vidya deha of these Rudra Murtis.

30

The mantras for Mahesa and Rudra murtis are similar to the mantra of Sadasiva and these have been revealed in order to invoke the presence of vidya deha. Indeed, all such forms represent Lord Siva only. Such mantras have already been revealed in the section dealing with ‘mantroddhara’(extraction of particular mantras). The Guru should ideate the three bodies in the same way as explained before and invoke the presence of Siva in these forms which constitute the vidya deha.

31

Then he should perform the installation and other activities. Padya and others, perfumes, flowers, dhupa, dipa, naivedya associated with tambula – all these should be offered to Paramesvara(Sakala Murti) in the same way as offered in the daily worship of Sivalinga.

The Sakala Murti may be worshipped as associated with five enclosures, four, three, two or one enclosure or as associated with the enclosures as desired by the sadhaka. The Deities of the enclosures and their worship should be known according to the directions explained earlier. If the Sakala Murti is associated with enclosures, then the Guru should perform bali, homa, daily festival and such others in the main temple belonging to that Murti. Suddha Nrutta which is not told here and all other festivals should be performed conforming to the context and circumstances.

The Guru may perform all the activities such as the worship of guardian Deities of the entrance, bali, homa and others, leaving out the suddha nrutta. He should perform 'nirajana' (waving the light before the image) for Natesa on the occasion of pradosha and such other specific festivals.

O, the foremost among the Gurus!, festivals, snapana, damana-festival, pavitra utsava, kruttika dipa-festival, samvatsara utsava, vasanta utsava, monthly festival in every month, offering of nava naivedya, expiatory rituals, renovation – all such activities which are prescribed for the temple of Lord Siva should be performed for the temple of Ambika(Sivasakti) also.

Moreover, on the day of the lunar mansion ‘purva phalguni’ occurring in the month of Ashadha and Asvin, unique festival known as ‘pura karma’(covering the whole image of Sakti with food, fruits and flowers) should essentially be performed for the delighted state of Adisakti. O, the foremost among the Gurus!, the Sakti of Mahesa known as Mahesvari is significantly called Gauri. Likewise, the Sakti of Sadasiva is significantly called Manonmani.

The form of Manonmani should be contemplated as constituted of Manonmani mantra. The form of Gauri should be contemplated as constituted of Gauri mantra and as associated with twenty-six kala mantras. The form of Adisakti should be worshipped with the recital of the mantra pertaining to Adisakti.

Now I will explain the process of performing the snapana-abhisheka for the Supreme Lord. This snpana may be done in the eighth lunar day, fourteenth lunar day, day of equinox, day of solstice, monthly conjunction(the day in which the previous month ends and the succeeding month begins), eclipse-day, specific lunar mansion of each month, ardra-nakshatra, new-moon day, full-moon day, auspicious session (yoga) in Sunday, the end of festival, three sessions of each day, birth-star of the sponsor, the star in which the sponsor(kartu) left his physical body or the stars compatible to these stars(anu nakshatras), the star in which the coronation of the Ruler took place, occurrence of famine, occurrence of bad omens, earthquake, destruction occurred in any direction due to conflagration, affliction with epidemics such as fever, smallpox and so on, the concluding phase of installation, occurrence of portents(unnatural events), outburst of all kinds of disease, inauspicious positions of the planets, daily worship, occasional worship, and worship as desired by a devotee(for specific purpose). In all such occasions, snapana-abhisheka should be performed for Lord Sankara according to the directions given in the Agamas. There are many kinds of snapana-ablution.

In the rituals concerned with the great snapana, the first ritual is the ‘offering of fresh sprouts’. This could be done in the pavilion mentioned earlier or in a pavilion bereft of the central altar. Or, in the pavilion built in the east, without taking into consideration the proportionate measurements and other factors applicable to it.

Or, the pavilion may be built, holding its maximum width to be 5, 6, or 7 hastas. It may be provided with 4 entrances or to the maximum of 64 entrances. It should be beautified with all kinds of decoration and adorned with well-designed arches.

Being associated with the dance, sounding of musical instruments and such others and accompanied with the melodious sounds of songs set to music, the Guru should purify the ground with the recital of astra mantra. Then he should besmear the diluted cow-dung over the ground with the recital of vamadeva mantra. The marking of lines should be done in such a way that each square grid is with a measure of one span, with the recital of aghora mantra. If the inner space is of one span, then two spans should be taken for siva-kumbha and one span for the vardhani kumbha(Sakti kalasa). Three spans should be taken for the pericarp of the lotus-design.

ekonapañcāśat saṁkhyāṁ aṣṭottaraśataṁ dvijāḥ
āvṛtidvaya saṁyuktaṁ tadbāhye parikalpayet 	14

Otherwise, a passage may be formed in the north side of the lotus-design. Based on the position of the vardhani kalasa, two spans may be taken for the pericarp of the lotus. Four kalasas should be placed on the four petals of the lotus, each one in each main direction. This is the arrangement of five kalasas (including the siva-kumbha and sakti-kumbha, counted as one). If four more kalasas are placed in each intermediary direction, arrangement of nine kalasas could be fulfilled. Then, sixteen kalasas should be placed in one enclosure surrounding the lotus, to arrange for the placement of 25 kalasas. Then 24 kalasas should be placed in two enclosures surrounding the previous one, to arrange for the placement of 49 kalasas. O, the twice-born Sages!, for placing 108 kalasas, two more enclosures should be added outside the previous enclosures.

madhyame tithi saṁkhye tu madhyamaṁ tattrayam tyajet
aṣṭottaraśataṁ hyetat sahasrañcennavādhikam 	17

Twenty-five kalasas should be placed in the middle. Two rows or one row should be left out around this. There should be eight entrances and three enclosures in the outer side. There should be four arrays, one in each main direction and each one consisting of 15 kalasas. Similarly, there should be four arrays one in each intermediary direction and each one consisting of 9 kalasas. If 15 kalasas are in the middle arrays, three kalasas are to be removed in each main direction from the second enclosure so that only four kalasas are left out. This is the process for arraying 108 kalasas. For the arrangement of 1000 kalasas, nine kalasas should be in excess.(It is not exactly 1000, but totally 1009 kalasas)

śivavyūhasya paritaḥ ṣoḍaśaiva parityajet 	20

For the placing of 1000 kalasas, there should be 40 arrays(vyuhas), each array consisting of 25 kalasas. The interspace between the arrays may be of one, two or three rows. Around the central array, there may be four or eight fire-pits. The fire-pits should be designed according to the number of the arrays for the purpose of offering the oblations. In this Agama, it has been set forth that there should be inner passage (antarmarga)and paths(vithi) between the arrays(to enable the priest go around). Sixteen kalasas should be removed from the enclosure lying around the array in which siva-kumbha has been placed.

śeṣairdikṣu caturdvāraṃ sahasre punarucyate 	22

The process of flapping the powdered thread(sutra nyasa) has been told. There is another way of doing this sutra-nyasa. In the arrangement of 108 kalasas, 25 kalasas should be placed in the middle. Outside the inner passage, there should be 21 kalasas in each intermediary direction. In all the four main directions, there should be four entrances. Another method of arranging 1000 kalasas is now told.

syāccaturdaśa samkhyātā vīthibāhye krameṇa ca
tadbahirhomam iṣṭam syāt caturdikṣvaṣṭa dikṣu vā 	24

Two threads should be flapped so that lines are formed along east-west direction. Similarly, two lines should be marked along north-south direction. The space between them may be one and a half modules or one module. Outside this, fourteen rows should be designed(in circular pattern) in due order. Outside these rows, oblations should be offered into the fire-pits designed in the four main directions or in all the eight directions.

śālimānam idam tasmāt hīnam naiva prayojayet 	26
adhaścedabhicārārtham bhavedeva na saṁśayaḥ

Then the Guru should design a raised platform(sthandila) with the recital of tatpurusha mantra. It is of superior kind if it is designed with 4 prasthas(1 prastha , approximately 1 litre) of paddy grains. It is of medium type, if it is designed with 3 prasthas of paddy. It is of lower type, if it is designed with 2 prasthas of paddy. A sthandila designed with one prastha of paddy belongs to more inferior type. This is the measure of paddy to be used for making the sthandila. Paddy whose measure is below one prastha should never be used. If such lower measure of paddy is used, then the sthandila would become fit for malevolent purpose. There is no doubt about this.

tilārdhaṁ lājamānaṁ syād aṣṭadroṇaṁ sahasrake
aṣṭādhika śivavyūhe śālimānaṁ prakīrtitam 	29

The siva-kumbha should be such that it could hold from 2 prasthas upto 10 prasthas, the increment being one prastha each time. Half of this capacity should be for the vardhani kalasa(sakti kalasa). The measure of rice should be half the measure of paddy(vrihi); measure of sesame should half the measure of rice; measure of parched paddy-grains should be half the measure of sesame. For the siva-array containing 1008 kalasas, the Guru should make use of 8 dronas of paddy.

catustridvyeka saṁkhyāta prasthamāna prapūritam 	31

The Guru should place the kumbha with the recital of hrudaya mantra and should place gold coin or gold sheet and other such materials inside the kumbha. The measure of water to be poured into the siva-kumbha should be from one prastha to 27 prasthas, increasing the measure by one prastha each time. Half the measure taken for the siva-kumbha is for the vardhani-kalasa. Other kalasas may be filled up with 4, 3 or 2 prasthas or 1 prastha of water.

The kalasas should be wound around with three-stranded, two-stranded or one stranded thread in a systematic way. Or, they should be wound around with single stranded thread three times. This winding should be done with the recital of kavaca-mantra. The kumbhas should be placed with the recital of hrudaya-mantra. A kurca(bunch of darbhas) should be designed with 36 darbhas and it should be placed over the kalasa after making the kurca to be with three prongs. The kurca should be placed with the recital of isana-mantra and all other substances should be placed with the recital of mula mantra.

Ruby, sapphire, beryl, coral and pearl – these are considered to be five gems and these should be placed inside the kalasa. If these are not available, gold could be placed. The gold may be of one nishka, half a nishka, quarter nishka, 10 mashas, 8 mashas, 4 mashas or 2 mashas. In the case of extreme non-availability, the gold may be of one masha. Half of the measure taken for the siva-kumbha should be for the vardhani-kalasa. All other substances to be placed inside other kalasas should be with half the measure taken for the vardhani-kumbha.

Padya, acamana, arghya, pancagavya(proportionate mixture of five substances got from the cow) – all these should be placed in the four main directions. Either perfumed water or pure water should be kept in the middle. This order of arrangement is for the first round(avarana). Kusodaka(water in which the tips of darbha are placed), milk, curd, slightly heated clarified butter or perfumed water – all these four should be placed in the intermediary directions. Or, the eight substances(padya and others) may be placed in eight directions starting from the east.

In the snapana of 5 kalasas, the presiding Deities are – Tatpurusha, Aghora, Vamadeva and Sadyojata. (Siva and Sakti, for the siva-kumbha and vardhani kalasa). In the snapana of 9 kalasas, the presiding Deities are the eight Vidyasvaras(Anantesvara and others). In the snapana of 25 kalasas, in addition to these 9 Deities, the presiding Deities are 8 Murtisvaras in the outer round and 8 Bhuvanadhipas (Vamadeva and others) in the inner round. In the snapana of 49 kalasas, in addition to the Deities mentioned above, the presiding Deities are 8 Ganesvaras in the next outer enclosure, 8 Bhuvanadhipas (Angushtha and others) in the next round and 8 Rudras(Krodha and others) in the next enclosure. Or, in all the three outer enclosures, Sata Rudras could be considered as the presiding Lords.

Having designed a square mandala so as to consist of 36 grids(padas), the Guru should leave out the 4 grids in the middle. In the remaining 32 grids(small squares), theGuru should place padya and other substances in the order mentioned before, starting from the south-half of the east row and ending with the north-half of the same row. All others, not mentioned here, should be placed as said earlier. This is the snapana of 33 kalasas which would look like the snapana of 49 kalasas.

Water mixed with astringent substances(kashaya) and purifying water(marjana) should be placed at the end phase with the recital of hrudaya mantra. Water mixed with the essence of the bark of four trees – asvattha, udumbara, nyakrodha and madhuka, known for their medicinal sap) is known as kashaya (decoction). The essence of the bark of mango tree and rose apple tree is also recommended as additional substance for kashaya. Water added with durva, sesame and the tips of darbha-grass is called marjana. In the snapana of 81 kalasas, the substances upto atibala should be placed.

There should be 40 arrays(vuhas) and in each array 25 kalasas(vessels made of metal) or ghatas(vessels made of earth) should be arranged. Half the measure of gold placed in the vardhani should be put in each kalasa. Each kalasa should be wrapped up with new cloth and should be furnished with a bunch of darbhas(kurca). The recommended substances should be put in each kalasa. O, the twice-born Sages!, with regard to the provision of substances, both the two patterns, square and circular, are considered to be superior. Performance of snapana-abhisheka with all the substances recommended for the purpose is declared to be superior. Performance of snapana with half the number of the substances mentioned is of medium type; with one fourth of the substances mentioned is of inferior type.

svāhāntaṁ vā namaskāra prāntaṁ praṇava pūrvakam 	143

The eight Vidyasvaras should be worshipped in the middle row. In all other kalasas, only Lord Siva should be worshipped. He is extolled very specifically with 1000 mantric names. Reciting those names, the Guru should worship Him in a simple way. Each name should be associated with the seed letter preceded by pranava(OM) in the beginning and it should be recited as ending with the fourth case and 'svaha' or 'namah'.

The Guru should leave out the outer enclosure in the arrangement of 1008 kalasas and keep the four arrays in the four intermediary directions starting from the south-east, as they are. Fire-pits should be designed for the purpose of oblations in the space between the siva-vyuha(central array) and the four inner corners. Outside this, there would be a row consisting of 16 arrays. All other arrangements are common for the designing of the snapana of 508 kalasas.

In the arrangement of the snapana of 208 kalasas, 8 kalasas should be in the central array. Outside this, there would be the enclosure consisting of 16 arrays. The Guru should keep the 4 arrays in the four main directions and 4 arrays in the four intermediary directions, leaving out the remaining 8 arrays. He should arrange 25 kalasas in each array. In this way, 208 kalasas could be placed.

The measure of various substances to be placed in the kalasas is told elaborately once again. O, the foremost among the twice-born Sages!, it is told that with regard to the gems, each gem may be taken in its own shape, without reducing the size. The measure of metal should be from 10 masha to one nishka, increasing by one masha each time. The measure of stones should be increased in the same way as the measure of the metal is increased. The measure of seeds should be from one quarter of nishka to one pala, increment being one quarter each time. The measure of unhusked rice and sugar should be as that of the seeds.

The measure of pancagavya, curd and milk should be as that of vibhuti. The measure of ghee may be equal to the measure of milk or half that measure. The measure of honey should be one quarter of this measure or it may be one pala. If the required fruits are not available, available fruits may be placed and water may be filled in the kalasa for which the fruit is not available. The measure of sesame oil should be as that of ghee. Or, the measure of all liquid items may be decided according to the capacity of the container(vessel). Or the measure may be half, quarter or half-quarter of the measure of ghee. The flowers should be in terms of handful. The herbal creeper should be taken as it is, without any reduction in length or thickness. The medicinal substances also should be taken as they are.

The size of the vessels should be maintained in the same way. The measure of roots should be the same as that of perfumes. The measure of fresh flowers, fruits and others is desired to be the same as that of the perfumes. The measure of earth should be the same, as told before. The measure of all other substances may be decided in the same way.

Among all the perfumes, sandal is the best; among the earth to be collected from various places, earth collected from the roots of darbha is the best; among the barks, asvattha-bark is the best; among the roots, kuta or nata is the best. If white sugar is not available, molasses is recommended. Similarly, if sugarcane and honey are not available, molasses could be used. If the recommended fruits and flowers are not available, even the leaves and other parts of their trees may be used.

All these substances should be placed with the recital of mula-mantra. The kalasas should be closed with shallow plates(sarava) or tender leaves of mango with the recital of principal seed-letter. New clothes, in different colors, should be offered to the kalasas with the recital of hrudaya-mantra(they should be wrapped up with new clothes). The clothes which are in black color and which are less than 5 hastas in length should not be used.

sahasra kalaśe pañca śatahomaṁ samācaret 	166

With recital of the mantric-name pertaining to each Deity, sandal, flowers and incense should be offered. The Guru, the knower of mantras, should show the light and display the linga-mudra. Having effected protection(avakunthana) with the recital of kavaca-mantra, he should commence the fire-ritual for the offering of oblations. For the snapana of 1000 kalasas, 500 oblations should be made.

aṣṭapakṣe tu samidhastyajet koṇacatuṣṭyam 	169
pañcapakṣe tu samidhastyajeśchamyādi sambhavāḥ

The oblations may be offered either in the fire-pits or in sthandilas(raised, square platform) designed so as to be associated with all specific lineaments. Having performed the recommended sacramental rituals to the fire-pits or sthandilas according to the directions set forth in the section dealing with the fire-ritual, the Guru should offer the oblations of the faggots, clarified butter, cooked rice, parched paddy, and sesame in the specified order. The faggots of palasa, udumbara, asvattha and vata should be offered in east, south, west and north respectively. The faggots of sami, khadira, mayura and srivruksha should be offered in south-east, south-west, north-west and north-east respectively. If eight fire-pits are designed in the eight directions, this is the process. If fire-pits are to be five, the Guru should leave out the four fire-pits pertaining to the four intermediary directions. And the faggots of sami and others, recommended for these directions, need not be used.

brahmabhissakalīkṛtya vidyādehaṁ tato nyaset 	173

Having completed the fire-ritual, the Guru should go inside and worship the gaurdian Deities at the entrance and enter into the main shrine. Then he should purify the Linga in the same way as done before, ideate a fiiting seat on the pedestal and invoke the presence of the Form of Siva and worship it. Having done the nyasa of brahma-mantras and anga-mantras, he should ideate the presence of vidyadeha.

Then he should offer the padya, acamana , arghya, sandal, flowers along with incense and light. The light shold be shown with the accompaniment of mula-mantra recital. Being accompanied by the sounding of musical instruments, dance, rendering of songs set to music, sounding of the conch, energizing sounds of the recital of Vedic hymns, echoing sounds of the bell, sounds hailing the victory of the Lord(jaya ghosha), the Guru should lift up the siva-kumbha and vardhani-kumbha, take them to the main shrine and place them on the tripod put in front of the Linga.

Having offered padya, acamana and arghya to Siva and Sakti who are present in the kumbha and kalasa, the Guru should worship them with sandal and flowers along with incense, light and arghya. Then he should take out the lid of the kalasas with his right hand. Reciting the mula-mantra of Siva, the Guru who has known well the significance of tattvas(philosophical tenets)should take out the darbha-kurca and flowers fully drenched with the consecrated water of the kumbha and place them on the head of the Linga. He should offer a seat to Sivasakti on the left side of Lord Siva and worship Her.

Reciting the mula-mantra with contemplative mind, the Guru should bathe the Linga with the consecrated water of the siva-kumbha and similarly, he should do the abhisheka for Sivasakti who is in the form of the pedestal(of the Linga), reciting the mula-mantra pertaining to Sakti. He should offer the padya-water at the feet of the Lord with the recital of sadyojata-mantra; acamana-water in the mouth of five faces with the recital of five mantras from isana to sadyojata; arghya-water at the tuft on the head. Abhisheka with pancagavya and other substances should be done with the accompaniment of ringing of the great bell (maha ghanta). It should be followed by additional bathing with pure water and offering of incense. This additional bathing with pure water associated with the offering of incense should be performed even at the end of snapana-abhisheka.

If various kinds of fruit, pancagavya, pancamruta and such other items are kept there to be used for abhisheka, the Guru should perform the ablution for the Lord with those items. Having sprinkled the perfumed water(rose water) over those items, he should do the abhisheka with devotion and love, without being hasty. Having worshipped the Lord according to the directions set forth in the section dealing with 'arcana', he should complete the snapana-abhsheka with the performance of fire-ritual.

If the snapana is meant for the formed Lord(sakala murti), it should be done according to the directions pertaining to the worship of such sakala-form. The Guru should ideate a fitting seat and worship the Deity present in the kumbha with the recital of mula-mantra pertaining to that Deity. Having designed the form with brahma and anga mantras, he should do the nyasa of kalas pertaining to that form. Having contemplated the vidya deha and duly meditated on the exact form of that Lord, he should worship Him.

The Guru should offer the padya and others to the Lord present in the snapana with the recital of hrudaya-mantra. Then he should offer sandal, flowers, incense, light and arghya, display the linga-mudra and do the 'avakunthana' (protection) with the recital of kavaca-mantra. Having worshipped Gauri(Sivasakti) present in the vardhani-kalasa, he should display the yoni-mudra and do the 'avakunthana' with the recital of kavaca-mantra. He should invoke the Rudras who are present in the enclosing rows and worship them according to the process mentioned earlier.

Having gone near the Image of the Deity(sakala murti), the Guru should contemplate the seat and the form of the God, and do the 'sakalikaarana'(designing the form) with the recital of mantra pertaining to the vidya deha. Then he should do snapana and others and offer the padya, acamana and arghya. Following this, he should offer the sandal, flowers, incense and light.

devedatvāvaśiṣṭam tu devyām ca vinivadayetl	194

Having taken the siva-kumbha and vardhani-kalasa, as done before, to the main shrine, he should fix the mula-mantra in the heart of the God. Similarly, he should fix the mula-mantra (of the Sakti) in the heart of the Goddess. He should do the abhisheka in an orderly way and offer two-third of the padya, acamana and arghya to the God and offer the remaining one third to the Goddess.

Or, he may install the Goddess separately and do the abhisheka for Her. He may do the abhisheka at the feet of the God, with sandal and other substances. He should perform the snapana-abhisheka for the God and Goddess invoked in the framed picture, mirror and such other materials, as detailed in the section dealing with snapana. If the snapana is to be performed for Devi, kumbha or karaka should be placed in the middle.

There is no differentiation with regard to the substances meant for snapana. But, there is difference in the Deities for whom the snapana is meant. For the snapana of 5 kalasas, 5 kalas-Santi and others – are the Deities. For the snapana of 9 kalasas, nine Saktis – Vama and others – are the Deities. Dharika and others should be worshipped in the main directions, in the sanpana of 25 kalasas. Ananta and others should be worshipped in the intermediary directions. Or, in the snapana of 25 kalasas, the presiding Deities of the 25 tattvas from pruthvi to pradhana may be worshipped. In addition to these, the consort-deities should be worshipped, reciting the relevant name joined with feminine gender (sthri linga).

O, the foremost twice-born Sages!, I will tell the process of snapana with milk and other substances under this context itself. Milk, curd, clarified butter, honey, pancagavya, pancamruta, sugarcane juice, all kinds of fruits, seeds, parched paddy, flour, powder, haridra, flowers, coconut, products of coconut, water associated with all fruits(phalodaka) kept in perfect kalasas and other containers, gandhodaka, aushadhodaka, suddhodaka, tailodaka, water fetched from the sacred rivers such as Ganga and others – with all these substances listed here, the Guru should perform the snapana-abhisheka for the Supreme Lord to nullify all kinds of defect and aberration.

The snapana-abhisheka should be performed for: the fulfilment of all the desired fruits, effecting victory to the king, the attainment of everlasting health, especially the attainment of longevity, attainment of all kinds of wealth, attainment of strength and bodily effulgence, setting right the miserable state of famine and scarcity prevailing in the country, making the country free from the evils and harms. It should be performed with great care and sincerity on the occasion of earthquake, unnatural happenings and evil omens. To bring all the worlds under control, to be blessed with plentitude of elephants and horses, to nullify the diseases which are affecting them, to put an end to the occurrence of diseases, to bring strength to his army when war breaks out, to effect immortality to the soldiers, to instill fear in the heart of the soldiers in the army of enemies, to bring destruction to the enemies or to keep them under perplexed state, to nullify the diseases affecting men, women, cows and other beings – this snapana-abhisheka should be performed.

On the birth-star , on the day in which coronation of the king took place, on the day of candra-ashtama, on the day in which the lunar mansion signifies unexpected destruction, on the day of equinox and of solstice, on the day of eclipse, on the day of installation of Deity, during a grand festival, pavitrotsava, on the day in which the offering of damanas (damanotsava) takes place, on the day of kruttika star synchronizing with light festival in the month of Kartika, on the specific star of each month, the eighth lunar day, the fourteenth lunar day, the fifteenth lunar day, on the day of ardra-star in the month of Margasirsha, on the day in which expiatory ritual is performed, on the day in which fresh yieldings and crops are offered to the Lord(nava naivedya), during the auspicious activities undertaken by the people, for the protection of the common people, on the days in which special pujas are performed , on the day of festival in the honor of devotee(bhaktotsava), especially on the day in which the procession of utsava murti is to take place and on the day of mruga-yatra – this snapana-abhisheka should be performed. O, the foremost among the Gurus!, this snapana may be performed for Siva daily, in the three sessions of each day, in the two sessions of a day or in one session.

Some specific details with regard to the process explained before are now told. The kumbha may be one or there may be five kumbhas. It may be with vardhani kalasa holding the substances mentioned earlier. For the five kalasas or one kalasa, Panca Brahmas may be held to be the presiding Lord. The kalasas and vardhavi kalasa may be associated with only one substance. Or, the desired substance may be placed in the siva-kumbha and the vardhani. The same substance may be placed in all the four directions or the recommended substances may be reduced in number.

svarṇādi nirmite pātre vidhānaṁ vai tadīritam 	220

Even in all the nine kalasas, padya, acamana, arghy and pancagavya may be placed. In the inferior type, only one substance may be placed(if all the substances are not available) and padya and others may be taken for the kalasas of all the directions. In the case of vessels made of gold and other metals, the same rules are to be observed.

All the three types of snapana (of one kalasa, 5 kalasas and 9 kalasas) are to be performed specifically in the course of daily worship(nitya puja). Even the snapana of 25 kalasas is highly recommended for the daily worship. In the daily worship of uttamaotatma category(the supreme among the superior type) the snapana of 108 kalasas may be performed as detailed in the section dealing with the daily worship. In the occasional(naimittika) and optional(kamya) worship, what has been told earlier should be followed.

From the snapana of 25 kalasas up to that of 1000 kalasas , some specific modifications applicable to the inner enclosure are now told. The arrays of four intermediary directions may be left out or maintained as they are. The Guru should perform the abhisheka for the Supreme Lord, in the manner explained before.

If some significant and special kind of puja is to be performed, it should be preceded by snapana-abhisheka which should be done in an appropriate place. In the process of significant and special puja, the aspects of insignificant and ordinary course of ritual should be avoided. O, the foremost twice-born Sages!, but in the process of ordinary course of ritual, the addition of the aspects of significant puja is allowed. Snapana is of three kinds – nitya(daily), naimittika(occasional) and kamya(optional). All those activities which have been prohibited should not be done in the nitya and naimittika. With regard to kamya, the options intended for creating obstacles, for taking revenge and such other malevolent ends should not be accepted. Such kamya-snapanas should never be performed.

‘Whether this ritual should be done or not to be done?’ – whenever such doubt arises, the matter should be solved carefully. It is to be known that performance of an essential ritual would lead to augmented growth and prosperity and non-performance of that ritual results in the defect of violation. The scriptures followed in this world are equally valid and the kriyas for which these rules are applicable have been laid down in those scriptures. So whatever has been prohibited in them should be avoided without doubt or hesitation. The differences in the kriyas and the mantras occur because of different scriptures. Therefore, kriyas enjoined in one particular scripture should be done according to the directions given in that work. They should not be done based on another different scripture.

If a kriya recommended for auspicious benefits has not been explained in the Agama being followed by the Guru, that kriya should be done resorting to other relevant Agama. This rule should be followed in the performance of kriyas. If expiatory rituals and such others have not been told in the Agama followed by the Guru and if such details are available in other Agama, the Guru should carefully look into those details. Details related to various phases(angas) of the ritual such as the designing of the ladles sruk and sruva may be known from his own Agama or from the other Agama. The matter should be thought over carefully in this way. The foremost King, who, having deeply ruminated over such matters, arranges for the performance of the recommended rituals such as snapana and others gets elevated to the highest state of being the Absolute Ruler of all within a short period. Longevity, health, things contemplated by him to achieve – all such benefits are attained by him. All those fruits needed for a perfect life come to him, of their own accord. Above all, constant devotion to Lord Siva occurs to him.

Having noticed that certain rituals are being done in disagreeable and contrary way, the king who remains unmindful of such misdeeds going on in the temple would meet with decay and gradual destruction. There is no place for dispute or discussion in this regard. Therefore the king should arrange for the rituals to be fulfilled by a foremost Acharya who hails from the lineage of Adisaivas affiliated to five gocaras, who has deep knowledge in the Saivagamas, who has extensively studied them, who is expert in performing the rituals. If he does so, his entire country would flourish well in all respects. O, the foremost among the Sages!, the Guru or the supreme Acharya who is the foremost expert in the Saiva Sastras should be solicited for the performance of such rituals. Snapana and such other powerful rituals should be performed only by such Acharya. Special pujas should be performed only him in order to attain the desired fruits.

Having carefully placed the Lord of Gods over the pedestal meant for abhisheka, the Guru should bathe Him with milk, curd, clarified butter, honey and others. Having rubbed the image with the paste of myrobalan fruit, he should do the abhisheka with the water mixed with perfumes and gently wipe it with pure cloth. Having besmeared with sandal paste and other perfumes, he should adorn the Lord with silken cloth and ornaments. Having offered sandal and flowers and beautified with flower garlands, he should offer the incense.

He should offer the lighted lamp and the light placed in the middle of plates (aratrika) whose wick is strewn with powdered camphor. He should offer the havishya prepared so as to be in five different colors; or he may offer payasa or unmixed cooked rice (suddha anna) associated with side dishes and eatables and various fruits. Then he should offer the 'tambula' associated with 'mukhavasa'. Cardamom, clove, camphor, powdered nutmeg and takkola, pieces of manjishta – the mixture of all these substances is known as 'mukhavasa'.

Having prostrated before the Lord and extolled Him, the Guru should obtain permission from Him for the performance of homa and reach the fire-pit. He should offer the oblations of the recommended faggots, clarified butter and caru along with sesame. Having offered 108 oblations, he should offer the consummate oblation (purnahuti) at the end. Having collected the sacred ashes from the fire-pit, he should present it to the yajamana (chief sponsor). Having entreated the Lord to grant the fruit as desired by the sponsor, he should repeatedly prostrate before Him.

Starting from one day, the special puja may be continued up to seven days. To accomplish the desired fruits, the rituals may be repeated two times in the second day, three times in the third day, four times in the fourth day, five times in the fifth day, six times in the sixth day and seven times in the seventh day. This kind of puja is declared as ‘visesha puja’ which is capable of yielding the fruits mentioned before.

The occasional puja should be performed at the end of daily puja, avoiding any contradictory procedure. If the necessity of doing the occasional puja forces itself while doing the daily puja, the Guru should complete the daily puja within a short time and perform the occasional puja.

If the sandhya-puja is scheduled to the second half of the session(sandhi) and if the occasional puja is to take place in the first half of the same session, the occasional puja should be performed in its own scheduled time, without any doubt or any discussion. The sandhya puja also should be performed within a short time. During these two pujas, relevant preparatory rituals(anushthana) should be done according to the same Agama.

The Guru should perform the daily puja up to the offering of incense or up to the offering of naivedya and in the succeeding time, he should perform the occasional puja. If the occasional puja is very extensive, lasting for a long time, the Guru should commence the occasional puja in its own scheduled time and perform the rituals pertaining to first enclosure to the last one. Then he should continue the remaining part of the sandhya puja. At the end of the offering of bali, he should perform the abhisheka with all the kalasas according to the procedure explained before.

If two occasional pujas occur, being scheduled to take place in the same session, the Guru should first perform that occasional puja which is of great importance and perform the puja of less importance at the end. If both are of equal significance, the Guru may first perform any one of the two according to his own choice. The duration pertaining to naimittika(occasional) is of two kinds – the short timed and the long timed. Equinox and such others belong to the short timed naimittika. Eclipse and others belong to the long timed naimittika. The short timed naimittika should be done first.

Snapana and other specific rituals should be performed during the first half of the total duration of solar eclipse. It should be performed during the second half of the total duration of lunar eclipse. It should be done before the commencement of the southern course of the sun(daksina ayana). It should be done after the commencement of the northern course of the sun(uttara ayana); should be performed in the middle of the duration of solstice(vishu). Snapana and others should be performed at the end of the four months – kanya, mithuna, mina and dhanus; should be performed in the beginning of the four months – simha, vruscika, kumbha and vrushabha. Either half, one or two yamas or ghatikas should be taken in the beginning of the month and at the end of the month for the performance of snapana and other special rituals.

At the end, the chief sponsor(yajamana) should worship the chief Acharya and honour him with new cloth, gold-ring and others. The worthy materials used in this yajna, such as golden cloth and others should be dedicated to the Acharya. They should not be given to others for their enjoyment. All those substances left over in the yajna and the decorative materials of the pavilion(mantapa) and sthandila, clothes, gold, kumbha, kalasa, torana(arch), the ladles-sruk and sruva, eight auspicious objects(ashta mangala), nine gems, the remaining portion of caru and naivedya, valaya and prapa of the pavilion and other materials used in snapana and others – all these should be dedicated to the chief Acharya only who hails from the lineage affiliated to five gocaras.

The sacrificial fees for the Acharya is from one nishka to 10 nishkas of gold. One nishka less one eighth of nishka is of medium type of fees. Half a nishka is of inferior type of fees. Nine varieties of fees have been told in the order of lower standard, with regard to simple rituals. If snapana and others are done daily, such performance would yield augmented growth and serene pleasantness for the mind.

5 Directions for the Performance of Daily Festival

नित्योत्सव विधिं वक्ष्ये नित्यपूजाङ्गमुत्तमम्।
शिवाग्रे वाथ तद्वामे ईशे शुद्ध महीतले ॥	१

nityotsava vidhiṁ vakṣye nityapūjāṅgamuttamam
śivāgre vātha tadvāme īše śuddha mahītale 	1
prāsāda maṇṭapāḍau vā gomayenopalepitel
prokṣitestreṇa saṁsthāpya pātram lakṣaṇa saṁyutam 	2

Now I will tell you the directions for the performance of daily festival which is the most essential part of the daily worship(nitya puja). A vessel designed so as to be associated with specific lineaments should be placed in front of Lord Siva, in His north-east side or left side , or on the pure ground or in the pavilion and such other structures built within the temple. The ground or the interior of the pavilion should be besmeared with cow-dung. Having sprinkled the consecrated water over the ground with the recital of astra-mantra, the Guru should place that vessel on the ground.

सौवर्णं राजतं ताम्रं कांस्य निर्मितं एव वा।
तिथ्यङ्गुलं समारभ्य व्योमाङ्गुलं विवृद्धितः ॥	३
द्वात्रिंशदङ्गुलान्तं तु पात्रमानं उदीरितम्।

sauvarṇam rājataṁ tāmraṁ kāmśya nirmitaṁ eva vā
tithyaṅgulaṁ samārabhya vyomāṅgula vivṛddhitaḥ 	3
dvātriṁśadaṅgulāntaṁ tu pātramānaṁ udīritam
vṛttaṁ iṣṭaghanopetaṁ karṇikā dalaśobhitā 	4

The vessel made of gold, silver, copper or bell-metal should be with a diameter of 15 digits to 32 digits (angulas), increasing the measure by one digit each time. It should be circular in size and with a suitable thickness as desired by the sponsor or the Guru. It should be provided with pericarp and petals of lotus so as to present pleasant appearance.

तत्पात्रे रस सप्ताष्ट नवदिग्रुद्र भाजिते।
एकद्वित्रिचतुःपञ्च षड्भागैः कर्णिका भवेत्॥	५

śeṣeṇa dalamākhyātaṁ vikārāṣṭa dalammatam
ardha tripāda mātraṁ vā dvimātraṁ karṇikocchrayam 	6
tadvadoṣṭa samopetaṁ kevalaṁ pātrameva vā

If the diameter of the vessel is divided into 6,7, 8, 9, 10 or 11 equal parts, the pericarp should occupy 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 or 6 parts respectively. The remaining parts are for the petals. There may 8 or 16 petals. The height of the pericarp may be half a matra(subdivision of digit), three-fourth of a matra or 2 matras. The vessel should be provided with suitable rim(known as the lip of the vessel), in the same way. Or, it may be an ordinary vessel, without pericarp or petals.

कुडुभद्वयं आरभ्य कुडुपादाढकावधि॥	७
तण्डुलं कल्पयेदन्नं लिङ्गार्थं वाक्षतार्थकम्।

taṇḍulam kalpayedannaṁ liṅgārthaṁ vākṣatārthakam
madhvājya miśritaṁ vānnaṁ prakṣipet pātra madhyame 	8

For the purpose of designing a Linga with cooked rice or for the preparation of akshata(unbroken rice mixed with turmeric powder), the Guru should take rice whose measure should be from one kudubha to one adhaka, increasing the measure by one kudubha each time. Or, the Guru may place cooked rice mixed with honey and clarified butter at the middle of the vessel.

तेनान्नलिङ्गं कर्तव्यं भूतमात्र प्रमाणतः।

aṅgulatrayamārabhya tithimātraṁ tu vistaram
agradvitricatuḥpañca mātraṁ ṣaṇmātrameva vā 	10

The Linga should be designed with this mixed rice , its dimensions being in terms of angulas derived from the finger-digits of the sponsor or the Guru. The Linga may be with a height of one angula to 18 angulas and its diameter may be from 3 angulas to 15 angulas. The top portion of the Linga may be with a height of 2, 3, 4, 5 or 6 matras.

Annalinga(Linga to be designed with cooked rice) should be worshipped in the daily puja and occasional puja. It may be worshipped in all the three sessions or in the morning and the noon. Flower-linga should be worshipped either in the noon session or in the pre-noon session. In the session of pradosha (evening session of the thirteenth lunar day), Akshatalinga(Linga designed with unbroken rice) should be worshipped. Pasupata Murti should be worshipped at that time.

The Pasupata may or may not be associated with Candrasekhara Murti. Pasupata Murti is of three kinds – gentle, wrathful and mixed. The gentle form of Pasupata should be with eyes having soft look; it may be with two or four hands; it is with the brightness of series of lightning; white in complexion; adorned with the crown of matted hair; right hands holding abhaya-mudra and rudraksha mala and left hands holding varada mudra and pasa(noose). If it is with two hands, abhaya-mudra in the right hand and varada-mudra in the left hand. Such form should be associated with all characteristic features. Instead of rudraksha mala and pasa, lotus and bell may be in the right hand and left hand respectively. Such lineaments should be given to the gentle form of Pasupata. Then the features of wrathful form are told.

The right hands of the wrathful form are holding the base of the trident and abhaya-mudra and the left hands are holding the top portion of the trident and varda-mudra. Its eyes are with fierce look, its head with flame-like hair. The hands may be shown in a different way: top of the trident in the right hand and the base of the trident in the left hand. Or, trident in the right hand and arrow in the left hand. The Guru should contemplate any one of these three forms of wrathful Pasupata and worship that form. The Raudra Pasupata is with such features. In the mixed form of Pasupata, right hands are holding the trident and parasu(hatchet) and the left hands are holding pasa and deer. Or, the right hands may thought of as holding the abhaya-mudra and the trident and the left hands as holding the varada-mudra and pasa. Thus, two kinds of mixed form of Pasupata have been told. These are the details concerned with the three forms of Pasupata.

The Flower-linga, Akshata-linga and Anna-linga should be worshipped with the recital of their respective mantric-names. Or, such Linga may be designed so as to be in a manifest-form(pratima) with the proportionate measurements applicable to it. The Linga should be placed on a pedestal which may be circular or elliptical in form and then worshipped. (A ball of cooked rice should be flattened so as to assume the circular or elliptical form of the pedestal) The pedestal of Annalinga should be in proportion to the Annalinga and its base and top should be with equal width. The maximum width may be up to one hasta. The pedestal should be provided with all characteristic features. Or the Linga may be worshipped as associated with 'sthalika' (earthen pedestal) designed with units of danda.

The form of Candrasekhara Murti should be in such a way that it possesses all the lineaments of an image. It should be with foot-pedestal(paduka) whose length should be from 3 angulas to 15 angulas, increasing the length by one angula each time. Its width should be in proportion to its length. Its height should be half the measure of its width, with an excess of one part out of eight parts of the width. Or, the height may be nine units of an angula, to be in the medium standard. The Bull or Ananta should be worshipped as the retinue Deity of the Linga. The Directional Devas(Lokapalas) should be worshipped in all the directions around, either in the beginning of the puja or at the end of the puja.

The Guru should perform the daily festival as associated with the newly designed Annalinga. He should perform the daily festival by placing the Annalinga as associated with paduka, Bull or Ananta and Lokapalas. Or, the Annalinga may be worshipped as associated with 2, 3 or 4 avaranas(enclosures) in the pre-noon session and in the specific session of pradoshā.

In the noon session, only Pasupata Murti should be worshipped, without any retinue Deity. Having adorned the image beautifully with flower garlands and ornaments, the Guru should mount the Murti on the stage-like wooden structure(ranga) or on the palanquin or on the head of servicing devotee (paricaraka) and come around the enclosure(prakara) in clockwise direction(pradakshina). Holding the canopy ,specially designed umbrella(chatra), camara and various flags, the devotees should accompany the procession. The pradaxina should be done, being associated with the musical rendering of songs ,dance, sounding of various musical instruments, dhupa(incense) and dipa.

The first pradakshina should be done with the sounding of mangini-tala(tala - reverberating mode of beat). With brahma-tala in front of the Bull, bhrungini-tala in the south-east, canda-tala in front of the seven Matrus, dhakkari-tala in front of Vighnesa, udghata-tala in front of Sahanmukha, kunci-tala in front of Jyeshtha Devi, with tataprahara-tala in front of Durga, vishama-tala in front of Candesvara, the first pradaxina should be done. This pradakshina may be done in the village, city or in the temple prakara. The secnod pradakshina is known as Mahapitha pradakshina. With sabari-tala, one pradakshina or two or three pradaksinas may be done.

Or, the pradakshina may be done with brahma-tala in front of the bali-pitha. Two pradakshinas may be done with the sounding of gana-tala. In the paisaca enclosure(fifth enclosure), only one pradakshina should be done, with the sounding of sabari-tala. The conch may be sounded in front of the gopura, instead of the sounding of musical instruments.

Having done the third pradakshina, the Acharya and the devotees should enter into the temple. All devotees should wash their feet and then enter into the Siva-temple. Or, the Guru should worship the Deities installed with the pedestal in the entrance of the front hall by offering padya and others and then enter into the main shrine. Having raised and grasped the form of Siva invoked in the Annalinga and others, he should unite it with right side of the Mula Linga. The Padukas of Lord Siva , placed in the left side and right side of the Mula Linga, should be worshipped.

For the other Deities installed in the main shrine, processional Murtis pertaining to them may be designed so as to appear exactly like the Mula Bimbas(Main Deities). Such Murti should be designed according to the lineaments prescribed in the chapter dealing with features of that Deity. Having prepared the processional image of the Main Deity, the Guru should perform the daily festival in continuation of the daily worship. In the daily festival, form designed with cooked rice, akshata and flowers along with the weapon pertaining to the Main Deity and the vehicle pertaining to that Deity should be worshipped. The two padukas of the Main Deity should be worshipped. All other details of the festival are common for all the Deities.

Now, I will explain the details of festival, the subject-matter of which comes next in the order of chapters mentioned in the beginning. The activities which take place from the beginning of flag-hoisting to the lowering of the flag go by the collective name ‘utsava’. ‘Offering of fresh sprouts’ related to the flag-hoisting should be done prior to the raising of the flag, since it is a part of such activity. First, the exact lunar mansion pertaining to the ‘sacred immersion in the temple tank’(tirtha) should be ascertained and three days or two days before that nakshatra-day or on the same day, the rituals concerned with ‘dhvaja arohana’(raising the flag) should be commenced.

The nakshatra which has been specified for a month, the ardra nakshatra of every month, the birth-star of the Ruler, the star on which the Ruler breathed his last, the coronation-star – these may be taken as the star fit for tirtha. In the month of Magha, the sixth lunar day should be held as the day of tirtha. Or, either the full moon or the new moon day may be held as the day fit for tirtha in all the months. The star synchronizing with equinox and with solstice, the star synchronizing with the ending phase of eclipse, the fifth and the eighth lunar day of the months other than Magha – these may be considered to be fit for the tirtha-utsava. Three days or two days prior to the duration of the grand festival calculated from the star fixed for the tirtha-utsava, or on the same day on which the festival is to be commenced, the Guru should raise the flag either in the day-time or night-time, preceded by ‘adhivasana’(preparatory ritual performed during the prior night).

The length of the flag may be from 5 hastas to 14 hastas. O, the twice-born sage!, this measure of length is said to be between the top (head) and the bottom(tail). Or, the length may include the measure of the head and the tail. One part out of four parts or seven parts of the length may be the measure of width of the flag. The length of the tail may be equal to the width or three-fourth or half of the width. The head should be with a measure equal to the width. The flag may be designed so as to be with two tails.

The flag should be provided with two cane-sticks at its top and the bottom. The image of the Bull should be drawn in the middle of the flag. The image should be rendered auspicious by the application of ‘aya’ and other factors and it may be drawn so as to be in a standing posture or in a recumbent posture. The Bull may be white or red in color; its tail should be in whitish-yellow color. It should be associated with red-colored horns and hoofs.

The Bull should be shown in such a way that it is facing the village streets while the flag is taken in procession around the village and other places. It should be adorned with the bunches of visvamitra-darbhas which should be 36 units(matras) in length. Its ‘aya’ and other factors should be corrected with the addition of ‘jatyamsa’. The eyes of the Bull should be in three colors. The image of the Bull should be associated with all characteristic lineaments and it should be beautified with gold chains. The measure of the flag-post and of the Bull depicted in the flag should be in terms of matra-angulas. The Bull should be associated with lotus-pedestal, two lamps on its two sides and two camaras(bushy tails of deer). Its head should be shown as shadowed around by a royal umbrella. It should be depicted so as to be with two ‘purna-kumbhas’(sacred vessels symbolizing perfection and wholeness). It may be shown as associated or not associated with trident.

Having designed the Bull(in the flag-cloth) and having performed the specific ritual known as the ‘opening of the eyes’ to the Bull, the Guru should purify the ground in front of the main shrine or in the pavilion by sprinkling the consecrated water over it with the recital of astra mantra or in some other place which could be serene and pleasing to the mind. There should be two sthandilas(raised platform) over the ground. The Guru should place a vessel on the pedestal kept over the tripod.

He should place the flag and a newly made pot(kalasa) associated with cloth, gold, gems and bunch of darbha-grass, a fitting lid and thread wound around it. At the center of the sthandila, he should place the kalasa meant for the Bull. Then he should arrange eight kalasas around the central kalasa, all of them provided with lid, cloth and bunches of darbha, starting from the east of the Bull. These eight kalasas are meant for the guardian- deities of eight directions.

Then, the Guru should worship the Adharasakti, Ananta, Dharma, Jnana, Vairagya and Aisvarya and recite the asana-mantra pertaining to the Bull. The word 'vrushasana' should be ended with the fourth case; it should be preceded by the seed letter of the heart(ham) and pranava-akshara(Om) and terminated with 'namah'. This is the mantra for the seat of Vrusha(Bull). (Om ham vrushasanaya namah). The murti-mantra of the Bull could be formed by adding the seed letter 'vrum' preceded by 'ham' with the words 'vrusha murtaye'. (Om ham vrum vrusha murtaye namah)'

After this, he should do the nyasa of the brahma-mantras pertaining to the Vrusha formed on the basis of the mula-mantra of the Vrushabha and of the anga-mantras starting from the hrudaya, in an orderly way. Then, he should invoke the Tattvas, Tattvesvaras, Murtis and Murtisvaras. He should perform the invocation and other preliminary rituals with the recital of the mula-mantra of the Vrushabha. Then, he should duly worship the Vrushabha with sandal, flowers and other materials, reciting the gayatri-mantra of the Vrishabha. Having worshiped the Bull invoked in the kalasa kept in the middle, he should worship the the guardian-deities invoked in the eight kalasas, kept around the main kumbha.

In the fire-pit or in the sthandila already designed, the Guru should perform the sacramental rituals such as ‘nirikshana’(casting the looks charged with mantra) and others and create the ‘siva-agni’ there. Then he should invoke the presence of Vrushabha at the heart of the fire and offer the oblations with the recital of the mula-mantra of Vrushabha and of the anga-mantras pertaining to it. Either 100 or 50 oblations should be offered with faggots, clarified butter and caru. Then he should offer the oblations for the Tattvas, Tattvesvaras, Murtis, Murtisvaras and others. To complete the fire-ritual, he should offer the consummate oblation(purna-ahuti) which is efficacious in fulfilling all the desired fruits, with the recital of the mula-mantra. Having worshipped with perfumes, flowers and others, he should offer the food mixed with mudga-powder for the Vrushabha present in the flag and the kumbha and for the Vrusha-sakti in the form of the pedestal.

Then, in the early morning, he should worship the flag and the kumbha with perfumes, flowers and other substances in the due order, offer the mukhavasa and tumbula for the Vrushabha present in the flag and the kumbha and offer the purna-ahuti. With the accompaniment of all sorts of auspicious things, sounding of all kinds of musical instruments, dance accompanied with the playing of musical instruments, he should mount the Bull-flag on the ranga or sibika along with the trident (astra raja). The idol of the Lord may or may not be mounted there. Then, having taken it in procession in clockwise order around the main streets of the village, he should come back and enter the temple.

The, he should install the flag-pole associated with all characteristic lineaments. This may be done in the day fixed for raising the flag or in the day of adhivasa(the day meant for preparatory rituals). The height of the flag-pole may be equal to the height of the shrine(of the ground floor) or twice or three times that height. Height in the measure of 6, 7 and 8 hastas belongs to the three kinds pertaining to the inferior level of height. Or, the height of the flag-pole may be equal to the height of the first floor, second floor and so on up to the top of the gopura. Or, the height may be 22 hastas measured with the medium type of hasta. If the height corresponds to the medium or inferior type, the height of the pole should be measured from the ground level, leaving out its height that has gone into the ground.

The flag-pole may be designed with the trees recommended for making all types of wooden frames (sula). Or, it may be made of the trees known for the bark containing the sap-essence, such as kramuka and others. Palasa, khadira, asvattha, vata, candana, sala, madhuka, tala, sara, amraka, vainava, jati, sami, bilva, campaka – these trees have been recommended for making the flag-pole. The circumference (thickness) of the pole may be 8, 16 or 24 times the basic units decided for making the pole. Or, the circumference of the pole may be retained as it is without adjusting it to correspond to these measures. Details about the flag-pole have been told. Now the details related to the dhvaja-yashti(yashti, the flattened wooden structure with three holes) are told.

The total length of the pole should first be divided into two equal parts and one part should again be divided equally into nine parts. Then one part should be taken as the length of the dhvja-yashti. O, the foremost Gurus!, the length of additional pole(upa danda) should be from 5 angulas to 16 angulas, the increment being one angula each time; the thickness of the upadanda should be in proportion to its length.

The thickness at the bottom of the upadanda should be divided into 5 to 12 equal parts and the thickness at the top of the upadanda should be taken as one part less than the thickness at the bottom. The trees recommended for making the upadanda may be those mentioned for the pole or venu tree. For joining the upadanda with the pole, three or two 'skandhas' should be taken. The length of such skandhas may be from 12 angulas to 36 angulas.

The breadth of the skandha may be from 7 angulas to 24 angulas. The tip at the bottom should be one-third of this width; or half or three-fourth of the width. It should be in the likeness of the shape of a ladle. Or, the tip may be with a width of 4, 3 or 2 angulas. These are the proportionate measures of the skandhas.

The 'danda' part of the flag-mast may be with a length of 6, 7 or 8 hastas. The base and the top portion of the danda which should be pushed into the ground should be provided with holes corresponding to the yashti. At the point where the base of the yashti is to be joined, the bottom of the skandha should be equal to half the measure of the hole(in the top of the danda). Both the ring(valaya) and the skandha should be fixed at the end of the danda. The hole(dip) at the top of the danda should be with a measure equal to one part out of three parts of the skandha or half or three-fourth of this measure. The depth of the hole may be held to be 6 angulas and the multiples of 6 angulas, increasing the depth by 6 angulas each time. The ring should be at the bottom and the top of the danda. Above the ring, one end of the yashti should be half of length of the hole.

The length of the yashti to be fixed at the top of the danda should be equal to the length of the danda-part which has been pushed into the ground. The hole to be made in the ground may be big or small, according to the height of the danda. Leaving out the height of the pole to be above the ground level, the remaining part of the pole should be inserted firmly into the ground. The bottom end of the pole should be under the ground upto the height determined for that. Both the valaya and the skandha should be fixed above the ground level. O, the twice-born Sages!, the depth of the hole in the ground may be from 25 angulas to 50 angulas, the increment of the depth being 3 angulas each time. The valaya associated with nails may be with a width of one angula to three angulas, increasing the measure by one-fourth of an angula each time. The interspace between the valayas should be according to the number and width of the valayas.

The rope should pass through between the valayas. The thickness of the rope may be with a measure starting from 2 angulas. Its length should be such that it corresponds to the activities concerned with the raising of the flag. The rope should be a three-stranded. If such rope is not available, a rope fit and strong enough to tie the flag firmly with the pole may be taken.

55

Having got such a rope, the Guru should perform the purificatory ritual to the danda. He should cover the danda with the bunches of darbha, starting from the upper part of the danda and proceeding downwards in clockwise direction. He should place a 'kurcha' (specially designed bunch, with a knot at the tip) designed with 100 darbhas at the front part of the yashti.

58

Then, the Guru should sprinkle the consecrated water over the pole with the recital of astra mantra and identify the three tattvas – siva tattva, vidya tattva and atma tattva – with the pole, starting from the top of the pole. The pole should be conceived to be in three parts, and each part should be identified with each tattva along with the presiding Deity of that tattva in an orderly way. These tattvas and Tattvadhivas should be worshipped in the three skandhas also. In the valaya, Surya should be worshipped. The rope represents Sivasakti and the presiding Lord of the pole is Siva Himself.

tadūrdhve sthāpayedaṇḍam yaṣṭiragre yathā bhavet 	61

The Guru should worship each Deity with perfumes, flowers and other substances and commence the placing and installation of gems and others in the respective place. He should place the gems at the bottom of the pole and either tortoise or the Bull at the same place. The measure of the gold to be placed there may be from one gunja to one nishka. These should be placed so as to face the temple. The tortoise or the Bull should be placed so as to face downwards. O, the twice-borns!, these should be worshipped with their relevant mantra pertaining to each deity. Above this, the pole should be installed so that the yashti is on the top of the pole.

The pole should be facing the temple. The pole may be installed either in front or in the back of the Bull-vehicle; or, near the great bali-pitha near the fifth outer gopura; or, in between the antarmandala and the middle gopura. Four such poles may be installed in all the four main directions or eight poles may be installed in all the eight directions. If there are eight poles, then the eight Vidyasvaras are their presiding Deities. If four, Tatpuruṣa and others are their presiding Lords. In the flag-cloth, only the Bull is the presiding Deity.

A vedika(altar) should be designed at the bottom of the pole and its designing is of various kinds. Strating from one hasta and increasing by three angulas each time, the maximum width of the altar may be up to two hastas. The height of the vedika may be equal to the width. Or , it may be three-fourth, seven, five, four or three parts out of eight parts of the width or half of the width. The vedika should be provided with three girdles(mekals), each one with a height of 8 angulas. Or, the upper mekalas may be with a height of two and three angulas less than 8 angulas.

In the altar which is not associated with girdles, a sub-altar(upa vedika) should be provided whose height may be from 2 angulas to 6 angulas, increasing the height by one-fourth of an angula each time. Or, its height may be one-eighth, one-fourth, half or three-fourth of an angula. A lotus should be designed over the altar whose width may be from 4 angulas to 18 angulas, increasing the height by one angula each time. The height of the lotus should be equal to the width. On the top of the pole, the recess between the petals may be from one angula to eleven angulas. The lotus should be provided with a fitting pericarp.

The projection of the pericarp from the pole may be from one angula to three angulas, increasing the width by one-fourth of an angula. Its height should be with the same measure. The lotus may be with 4, 8 or 16 petals and they may be designed to be in circular or square shape. The lotus may or may not be associated with sub-petals(intermediary petals). Having designed well the base in this way, the Guru should send off the Sthapati with whose help he has done all these, with due honors.

dhāma pradakṣiṇavaśānnītvā daṇḍasya sannidhim 	77

Having declared the auspiciousness of the day selected, the Guru should perform abhyukshna(a mode of sprinkling) and other related rituals with the recital of astra mantra. He should cover the pole with bunches of darbhas. Then he should lift up the vrushabha-kumbha and vrushabha-flag and along with trident (astra raja) and auspicious fresh sprouts, he should come around the temple in clockwise direction and reach the place where the pole has been installed.

On the tortoise-base, he should worship ‘Adhara Sakti’ and the ‘ananta asana’ and worship dharma and others, adharmā and others in the corners and in between the corners. He should worship Vama and other Saktis in the eight petals and Manonmani at the pericarp. And he should worship Sadasiva in the pole. Such worship should be done in orderly way with perfumes, flowers and other substances. This worship is associated with three items – padya, acamana and arghya – as detailed in the section dealing with ‘snapana’.

Having fastened the bull-flag with the rope with the recital of the vrushabha-gayatri mantra, the Guru should tie up a small bell with the flag, reciting the astra mantra. Contemplating on the form of the Bull, he should collect the seeds from the kumbha and place them at the heart of the Bull and worship him with perfumes, flowers and other materials. Then, the Guru should quickly raise the flag with the recital of the mula mantra pertaining to the Bull.

First, the Guru himself should raise the flag and then direct other competent person to complete the raising of the flag. If the Bull faces downwards, it indicates that peace would prevail in the country and in the world. If the bull-flag flutters upwards, the ruler would gain victory and all the Devas would be much pleased. It would be very auspicious, if the bull-flag flutters in the west, north, north-east and east indicating the welfare of the people, health, victory and abundant growth of good resources respectively.

If the flag flutters in the south-east, it indicates the occurrence of extreme miseries, untimely death and severe diseases. If it flutters in the north-west, it indicates the sudden and unexpected occurrence of fear among the beings. Even from the fluttering of the tail-part, such results may be inferred. If the flag gets arrested while being raised above due to some defects committed by the Guru, he should perform the expiatory fire-ritual to alleviate the evil effects. He should offer the recommended libations for 108 times with the recital of aghora-astra mantra, associated with faggots, clarified butter and cooked rice.

The Guru should sprinkle the consecrated water contained in the vrushabha-kumbha over the base of the flag-pole and similarly he should sprinkle the consecrated water contained in the eight kalasas pertaining to the Vidyasvaras of the Bull over the eight petals in the due order. Having worshipped with perfumes, flowers and other materials, he should offer the cooked rice mixed with the powder of mudga, as naivedya.

Starting from the declaration of auspicious day up to the offering of naivedya , all the activities should be done with the accompaniment of the sounding of all musical instruments, rendering of songs set to various musical flows and such others. In all the four directions, there should be dance-performance, especially the dance known as ‘suddha nrutta’. Starting from this activity up to the immersion in the sacred water(tirthotsava), the Guru should worship the Vrushabhadeva daily in one session, two or three sessions .

In a country where such flag is raised up to the yashti level of the flag-pole, there will not occur untimely death and scarcity and poverty will not occur even to those who have committed heinous sins. There will not be natural calamities, invasion by the enemies and mental confusion. There will not be distorted, confused and differing opinions between the people. Those who have been affected with diseases would regain their health and attain auspicious state. The clouds will shower rains in appropriate seasons, without fail. There will be abounding resources and wealth. The Ruler will be always victorious. All the evil and sinful deeds will fade away, giving room for peace and happiness. The cows will yield abundant milk. Those who have committed the sin of forgetting the good deeds done to them by others, those who have committed the sin of killing the brahmins, cows and such others become free from the effects of such sinful deeds, once if they see the ceremony of raising of the festival-flag. The two lineages (paternal and maternal) of the Master who arranges for such yajna of flag-hoisting festival are greatly blessed.

The 'beating of the drum' should be done in the night according to the directions set forth in the Agama. Two sthandilas should be designed in front of main shrine of the Supreme Lord. O, the foremost among the twice-born Sages!, the Guru should conceive the sixfold seat(constituted by ananta, dharma, jnana, vairagya, aisvarya and padma) on each sthandila and worship it. In one sthandila he should place the trident(astra raja) and in another, the drum, in front of the trident. The trident should be in the back and the drum, in front of the trident. The drum should be facing the south.

Having declared the auspiciousness of the day and time(punyaha vacana), the Guru should invoke the presence of various Deities in various parts of the Astra Raja. In the central spike is Rudra; in the right spike is Brahma; in the left spike is Vishnu. Parvati is present on the plank (below the spikes). Skanda is present on the kumbha; Vignnaraja is present on the upper part of the kumbha. Manmatha is present on the top of the main rod. Sun is in the middle of the rod. Candesa is at the bottom of the rod. Lakshmi is present in the front part of the east petal. Saptamatrus are in the front part of the south petal. Jyeshtha is in the front part of the west petal. Katyayani is in the front part of the north petal. 11 Raudras, 12 Adityas, 8 Vasus, 2 Asvins and 18 Ganas are present at the base of the trident. Having invoked the vibrant presence of all these Deities and having spoken the words of benediction and good wishes for them, the Guru should invoke the presence of the concerned Deities in the bheri(drum).

Having covered the drum with new cloth, the Guru should worship Rudra present in the middle of the face of the drum; Brahma in the right side of the face and Vishnu in the left side of the face. On the right side of the ring, he should worship Surya and on the left side of the ring, he should worship Candra. Seven Matrus should be worshipped in the set of seven wedges. The nine Grahas(presiding Deities of the planets) should be worshipped in the set of nine wedges. All the 11 Rudras should be worshipped in the place covered by the wedges. Shanmukha(the six-faced form of Skanda) should be worshipped in the beating stick. Starting from the east, all the faces should be specially worshipped in due order.

Having given three strikes with the bunch of darbha to the person appointed for beating the drum, the Guru should sprinkle the consecrated water over him with the recital of five-syllabled mantra and offer to him new cloth, sandal, flowers and garlands, upper garment along with the sacred thread. He should place a flower in his right hand, with the recital of hrudaya mantra. Having placed a flower on the drum, the Guru should lift the drum and place it on the arms of the drummer. With the permission given by the Guru, the drummer who has known well the system of beats, should beat the drum.

The Astra Raja(the specific Trident meant for the grand festival) should be taken in procession being associated with the icon of the Lord or Candesevara, with the accompaniment of musical rendering set in gandhara and other melodious flows(ragas) and musical beats such as sama-tala and others, recital of musical songs, dance performance, linga designed with cooked rice(anna linga), canopy, festival umbrella, incense, lights and related materials, sounding of the bells and such others. Having proceeded from the brahmasthana of the temple, the procession should come out and enter the royal streets of the city in due order. Bali may be offered starting from the east, in all directions with the mantra pertaining to each directional Deity.

At the end of the offering of the bali, dance should be performed with the accompaniment of musical beats and musical notes pertaining to each direction. In the brahma-sthana, brhama-tala and megha-raga; in the east, sama-tala and gandhara-raga; in the south-east, baddhavana-tala and kolli-raga; in the south, bhringini-tala and kausika-raga; in the south-west, malla-tala and nattabhashya-raga; in the west, navakhya-tala and srikamara-raga; in the north-west, bali-tala and takkesi-raga; in the north, kotika-tala and tarkaraga-raga; in the north-east, dhakkari-tala and salapani-raga. The system of tala should be maintained as it was maintained in the previous years.

If the grand festival is to be commenced preceded by the flag-hoisting, the concerned activities should be commenced three days before the day fixed for the immersion in the sacred water(tirthotsava). If it is to be commenced preceded by beating of the drum(bheri), the activities should be commenced two days before the tirthotsava. For that, four sthandilas should be designed in front of the main shrine of the Lord. The 'Astra Raja' should be placed in the first sthandila. In the second sthandila in front of the first one, the flag-cloth should be placed. Vrusha-kumbha should be placed in the third sthandila in front of the second one. The Bheri(drum) associated with all characteristic lineaments should be placed in the fourth sthandila in front of the third one.

Having worshipped all these in the same order with sandal, flowers and other materials in a systematic way, the Guru should perform the fire-ritual in a sthandila designed between the drum and the kumbha. He should worship the fire according to the directions given earlier and invoke the presence of tattvas and others. He should invoke the presence of the concerned Deities in the Astra Raja as directed before and beat the drum. Then he should bring it near the Astra Raja and the Bull. Being associated with anna-linga and being accompanied with the sounding of the musical instruments, he should take them in procession around the village in clockwise direction. Then, with the invocation of the concerned Deities, he should offer 'balis' to them and at the end he should come back to the place where the flag-mast has been installed.

Then, the Guru should perform the raising of the flag(dhvaja arohana) according to the directions set forth earlier. This should be done in the night preceded by the beating of the drum. The procession of the flag around the village may be done in the daytime after purifying and worshipping the flag. He should avoid the procession of the Bull during the time when the Deities are being invoked.

On the day in which the worship of yagasala commences, the 'offering of sprouts' should be performed in the night. The seeds should be deposited in the vessel for the sprouting of fresh shoots prior to that day or such activity may be left out in the previous day. Circumambulation around the village should be essentially done for the sake of 'tirtha-ankura'(germination in view of the immersion in the sacred river or tank). For all these activities, such germination ceremony may or may not be performed. Before the performance of 'ankura arpana'(offering of fresh sprouts), earth should be collected from the recommended places and the Guru should sow the seeds to cause the shooting of fresh sprouts. In the case of the festival which commences preceded by the beating of the drum, such activity should be done in the same day. In the case of festival which commences preceded by the offering of sprouts, all other activities should be carried out as told earlier.

The activities concerned with the commencement of yagasala-worship meant for Siva should be performed in the same night. The sprouting related to the flag-hoisting should be done in the ninth day prior to the tirtha-festival. The sprouting related to the main festival should be performed in the seventh day prior to the tirtha-festival. Having ascertained in this way, the Guru should worship the Astra-rajā in the previous day. Then he should construct the yagasala either in front of the front hall or in one of the sides of the front hall.

Either in the left or right side of the front hall or in a place located in one of the five enclosures(prakaras) the yagasala may be constructed as desired by the chief sponsor or the Acharya. It is good to have it constructed in the middle enclosure. The yagasala may be built in such a way that its side measures 5 hastas. Increasing this measure by one hasta each time, the side may be with a maximum length of 15 hastas. The yagasala may be built so as to be with 3 rows or 5 rows. The rows may be with equal width or the width of each successive row may be increased from one angula to nine angulas. The five rows may be designed in this way.

Even if it is with single row, it is highly recommended that it should be provided with four entrances. Or, it may be with only one entrance. Its roof may be in the shape of a pavilion, ‘sala’(elongated hall) or ‘kuta’(square hall). It should be provided with 9 fire-pits or only one fire-pit. Such yagasala should be associated with canopy, flags, darbha-rows, garland of pearls, bunches of coconut fruits and such other auspicious materials. It should be beautified with all kinds of decorative elements.

At the center of the yagasala, there should be an altar with a measure of 8 modules. This measure may be increased up to 28 angulas, increasing the measure by one angula each time. The height of the altar should be three parts out of four parts of its width or its height may be decided so as to be in proportion to the width of the rows. Such altar should be provided with a fitting sub-pedestal. The fire-pit may be with a width of one fist, one aratni or one hasta. It may be square or circular in shape and it should be associated with three steps(girdles).

The Guru should be on fast during that night, remaining in the front hall of the main shrine or in the enclosure associated with rows of various shrines. Having arranged for all these requirements, he should send off the silpi with due honours. Then he should declare the auspiciousness of the selected day and time(punayaha vacanam) and at the end he should perform the ‘vastu homa’. Cosequently, he should perform the rituals concerened with the acquiring of the selected ground(bhu parigraha) which is considered to be the most important aspect of all the yajnas.

The Guru should design a sthandila over the mid-region of the altar so as to be associated with essential features pertaining to such a sthandila. Paddy, rice, parched paddy, sesame and such other grains should be used for designing the sthandila. The measure of paddy may be from one drona to nine dronas, increasing the measure by one dorna each time. The measure of rice should be half the measure of the paddy taken. The measure of sesame should be half the measure of rice. The measure of parched rice should be the same as that of sesame. He should depict a lotus flower at the center of the sthandila so as to be associated with a pericarp set in variegated colors and with lustrous petals. The sthandila should appear charmingly with numerous lines designed with sesame and parched rice and it should be well covered with darbhas. Darbhas whose number may be from 5 to 36 should be strewn over it and the Guru should place the siva-kumbha associated with vardhani-kumbha at the center of the darbha-spread.

These two (siva kumbha and vardhani) should be surrounded by eight kalasas meant for the eight Vidyasvaras. All the kalasas should be wound around with suitable thread and covered with new cloth. They should be adorned with lotus flower made of gold. Each kalasa should be with a lid and specially designed darbha-bunch(kurcha) and with a bightness comparable to the resplendence of a well-ripe ‘bimba’ fruit. All the kaasas should be with proportionate measures prescribed in the chapter dealing with ‘snapana’.

Into the other kalasas meant for the directional Deities and others kept outside the Vidyasvara kumbhas, he should place the coins and sheets made of gold. This kind of placing the gems and gold should be essentially done by those who are very rich. For the kalasas kept in the middle, two clothes should be offered. Leaving out the kalasas kept in the sides of the entrance adorned with festoons(torana) and kept for the lokapalas, two clothes should be offered to the Vidyasvara-kalasas, Siva-kalasa and Vardhani. The Guru should place the ten weapons along with the eight auspicious insignia in the appropriate locations of the yagasala.

Having collected, arranged and kept ready the materials needed for the worship, the Guru should proceed to perform the tying of the protective band(raksha bandhana). The protective band should be designed with the thread made of gold, silver or cotton. The length of the thread made of gold or silver should be equal to the circumference at the joint of the fore-arm and upper arm of the main image. It should be with proportionate measures and provided with the design of the hood of the Serpent-king(Adishesha) at the one end and tail of the Serpent-king at the other end. It should be in the form a stripe(flattened appearance). For the thread made of gold or silver, Ananta(Adishesha) is the presiding Deity.

For the attainment of all the desired fruits, the protective band should be single stranded. Both ends of the thread should be provided with a ring and a hook for the purpose of joining the ends and making a knot. Such band is considered to be of superior type. The thread made of white silk, yellow silk and such others, is of the nature of three tattvas. For the attainment of peace and victory, the thread should be conceived as identical with five kalas. For the disease-free and healthy state, the thread should be conceived as identical with nine tattvas. The thread which is identical with six anga-mantras and the eight Vidyasvaras would yield progeny and longevity.

The length of the thread may exceed by one, two or three angulas according to the circumference of the hand(at the fist). Having purified the thread with water and besmeared the sandal paste over it, the Guru should place the thread over the bhasma kept in a special kind of vessel meant for holding the bhasma, with the recital of netra-mantra. Having designed a separate sthandila, he should place a stool or tripod at the center of the sthandila and place a vessel over the tripod. Then, he should fill up that vessel with rice whose appearance should be in the likeness of stars. The measure of rice should not be less than two prasthas or it may be one drona onwards. He should fill up the rice with the recital of hrudaya-mantra. Then, he should place the thread along with the bhasma-holding vessel over the rice.

Having covered the vessel with silken cloth and such others, he should place a garland over that. Being adorned with all kinds of decoration and being accompanied by the sounding of all musical instruments, it should be taken in procession around the village or around the temple, in clockwise direction. This procession may or may not be done. Then he should worship the Lord of the Devas. Having taken the thread along with bhasma with the thumb and the ring finger of the left hand and holding the other end with two fingers of the right hand, he should tie up the protective thread over the fist of the right hand of the Devas(Male Deities), reciting the anushtubha-mantra(trayambakam yajamahe.....) and the netra-mantra and place the bhasma over the knot. For all the Devis(Female Deities), the protective thread should be tied up preferably in the left fist or in the right fist.

Then, the Guru and other assisting priests should give the bhasma to all the devotees who have assembled there. He should offer the tambula, fruits, sweets and eatables along with coconut fruits to the Deity. These things may or may not be given to the devotees. The protective thread should be offered to Somaskanda Murti, Umasahaya Murti, Candra Sekhara Murti associated or not associated with Sakti and especially Nataraja Murti. Umamahesvara Murti, other Mahesvara Murtis appearing in seated-posture and other benign forms of the Lord may be designed for the performance of festival. For all such icons, the protective thread should be offered.

After the completion of the offering of the protective thread, circumambulation around the village and other sacred places should be done. These should be performed in the same day in which the worship of yagasala commences. If it is decided to offer the protective thread to other Murtis as desired by the sponsor(yajamana) or the Acharya, it may be offered in the middle of the festival, in the night prior to the fixed day.

This rule should be observed for the ferocious or benign forms of the Lord and the devotees of Siva. The protective thread should be tied up in the central stem of the Trident or over the right fist of the Deity designed there. The offering of protective thread is recommended for all the ten Weapons. This may be done either in the day prior to the commencement of yagasala-worship or in the same day in which the yagasala-worship commences.

He should arrange for the sprouting of fresh shoots in view of the sacred immersion(tirthotsava) prior to the days mentioned before. The Guru, along with the assisting priests(murtipas), should perform the 'sakalikarana' so as to make the physical body to be identical with the form of the Lord. Then, having performed the worship of the entrance, he should go inside the yagasala. Consequently, he should worship the Vastu Brahma, perform the purification of the elemental body and the subtle body and once again do the ‘sakalikarana’. Having prepared the padya, acamana and arghya, he should sprinkle the consecrated arghya-water over the interior of the yagasala and over the collected materials.

Then, he should mentally design a seat for the Lord over the sthandila formed on the altar. He should invoke the presence of the vidya-deha in the Sivakumbha, with the recital of ‘murti-mantra’. Then, he should do the nyasa of five brahma-mantras and thirty-eight kala-mantras to that form. Having ideated the conscious-body(vidya deha), he should invoke the presence of Siva who is in one oneness with Pranava. Having ideated the limbs such as hrudya, siras, sikha and others, he should worship the Lord with padya and other substances. Having invoked the presence of Manonmani in the same way, he should worship Her with the recital of Sakti-mantra. Then, he should worship eight Vidyasvaras around the Siva-kumbha and Vardhani-kumbha; worship the directional Deities and their weapons and finally he should worship the mirror and other materials.

Having worshipped in this way in due order, the Guru should go near the fire-pit, perform the sacramental rituals to the fire-pit and kindle the Sva-fire in accordance with the concerned rules. He should split the Siva-fire into nine parts or five parts(according to the number of the fire-pits) and distribute each part to each fire-pit designed in its own direction. Having done the nyasa and invoked the presence of Siva along with various parts of His form and with brahma-mantras and anga-mantras in the Siva-fire, he should offer the oblations. Tatpuruṣa and three others should be invoked in the fire-pits of four main directions and hrudya and other mantras should be invoked in the fire-pits of the four intermediary directions. Oblations should be offered in each fire-pit with the accompaniment of the mantra pertaining to each presiding Deity(Tatpuruṣa and others). In the principal fire-pit, oblations should be offered with the accompaniment of all the mantras.

Bamboo-rice, bilva, yava, molasses, sesame, white mustard, mudga – this is one set of the homa-materials. Flour, milk, yava, molasses, sesame, white mustard, mudga – this is another set; brahma sali, yava, sesame, white mustard, mudga, flour, bamboo-rice, molasses, honey – this is the third set; masha sali, yava, sesame, white mustard, mudga, flour, bamboo-rice, molasses, honey – this is the fourth set. O, Munisvaras!, the materials for the homa have been told in four different sets. In the oblations being done with these four sets, the Guru should offer the oblations of samid, clarified butter, cooked rice and parched paddy.

One hundred and eight oblations should be done with the recital of mula-mantra and one part out of ten parts of these, oblations should be done with the recital of brahma-mantras and anga-mantras. This is for the principal fire-pit. In all other fire-pits, half of the oblations done with the mula-mantra should be offered, in due order. In the Sivagamas, sometimes different mantras have been told in view of the different materials recommended for the oblations. But, the difference in the exposition of the mantras is not due to the difference in the variety of the Agamas. The Guru should offer the 'bali' upon the completion of the oblations. Or, he could offer the bali at the commencement of the homa and at the end of the homa, as well. The process of such bali is told here.

In the location where the Cosmic Deities are invoked, the Guru should offer the bali in a particular order. Laddu, modaka, maudga, molasses, flour – these should be offered as bali for Vighnesa, in the first day. Payasa, turmeric powder, lotus, parched paddy – these should be offered in the second day, for Brahma. This kind of bali is very pleasing to Brahma. Cooked rice mixed with krusara-powder and ghee, banana fruit – these should be offered in the third day. This kind of bali is pleasing to the five gross elements.

ṣaṣṭhe'hani pradātavyaṁ ṛṣiṇām prīti siddhayell	205

Turmeric powder and coconut fruit should be offered as bali in the fourth day and this bali is very pleasing to the Gandharvas. Offering of Priyangu mixed with ghee and indravalli as bali in the fifth day is highly pleasing to Indra. The cooked bamboo-rice mixed with ghee and jack fruit should be offered as bali in the sixth day. In order to please the host of Rishis(who have attained saloka mukti), such bali should be offered in that day.

Rice cooked with molasses and mixed with ghee and bruhati-fruit should be offered as bali in the seventh day. This bali is highly pleasing to Lakshmi. Cooked rice mixed with masha and ghee and the meat of goat(this refers to the fleshy part of brahma-dandu plant) should be offered as bali in the eighth day in order to please the Rakshasa ganas. Cooked and unmixed rice, curd, parched paddy – these should be offered as bali in the ninth day. This kind of bali is highly pleasing to Siva.

For the offering of bali to various Deities, the fitting substances are now told in a different way. The cooked and unmixed rice, curd, laddu, sweets and eatables, fruits and molasses - offering of these as bali is very much pleasing to Ganesvara. For the Bhutas, fruits, turmeric powder, ghee-rice, curd, flour and krusara are recommended. The bali should be offered to the Bhutas with these substances. With the bulb or the root of lotus, tips of darbhas, cooked sali-rice mixed with ghee and banana fruit, the bali should be offered to the host of Rishis.

In the night of the seventh, fifth, third or the first day, bali should be offered. In that case, the Guru should observe the directions given for the next day with regard to the day, Deity and the materials for the bali, leaving out the details given for that day. O, the foremost among the Sages!, the details concerned with the day, Deity and the materials for the bali have been told to you, in this way. The bali should be offered first to Brhama and others with these materials. For the delighted state of the presiding Deity of the day, bali should be offered with cooked and unmixed rice and curd. The bali should be offered for the delighted state of the directional Deities(Lokapalas), reciting the mantras pertaining to them.

Having offered the bali to Vrushabha and other Deities of the retinue, flag-pole, Brahma and others, the Guru should offer the bali at the Bali-pitha, in due order. Or, he may offer the bali from the flag-pole to the Bali-pitha, to each Deity in an orderly way. Alternately, he may offer the bali from Brahma to the Bali-pitha or from Indra to the Bali-pitha. He may offer the bali to the Day and the presiding Deity of that day in the Bali-pitha itself . He may offer the cooked and unmixed rice to the Day and the presiding Deity of that day and others, in order to make them delighted. He may offer the bali to the Day and the concerned Deity with the materials recommended for the bali to be offered to the directional Deities. Or, the bali may be offered to the directional Deities with the materials recommended for the bali to be offered to the Day and the concerned Deity.

O, the foremost twice-born Sages!, various icons representing the manifestations of Siva which excel each other in beauty and elegance should be taken in procession.

Following these icons, offering of bali should be done in association with bali-pitha, anna-longa, trident, ten weapons and golaka-linga. The bali should be offered to the host of retinue-deities present in the festival-car(ratha) and Nandikesvara. These icons, adorned with all kinds of decorative materials may be taken in car or palanquin. Or, these icons may not be taken preceding the mounted Deity. But, the activities concerned with bali and related rituals should be maintained.

Vrushabha should be in front of the mounted Deity. Behind that, a wooden structure known as ‘mukha ranga’(a stage-like structure with a projection in front) should be for the Dancing form of the Lord. Following this, the big temple-car, all parts of which should be very beautiful and charming, meant for the Supreme Lord should proceed. My virgin-ladies who are specially adorned with ornaments, who are holding the camaras in their hands, should be in front and two sides of the car. The Sivacharyas, who appear very bright with the ornaments made of nine gems and above whom the white royal-umbrella shines forth, should position themselves very near my car. My devotees(paricarakas) who are assisting the priests in various rituals, who are always taking delight in fulfilling the activities concerned with my worship and who are free from the defect of being careless and inattentive should be behind my car.

Rudra-kanyas who are holding in their right hand a rope tied to a lotus-bud , who are dressed so as to appear like male persons , who are with charming appearance, all bodily features of whom are beautiful and who are my devotees should be in another car known as ‘syandana’. This should come behind the paricarakas. The ‘Devadasis’ (ladies whose services and life are confined to the temple), who are adorned with ornaments like the Rudra-kanyas should come behind in another car. Behind this should come Candesvara accompanied by a separate set of musical instruments. In addition to these, all those forms of Siva which are sixteen in number and other forms and the much celebrated Sivabhaktas should take part in the procession, mounted on ranga-vehicle. O, the foremost among the twice-born Sages! these Sivabhaktas may lead the procession by going in front of Vrushabha or they may come behind Candesvara.

Among those rituals which are related to ‘bali’, the Guru may perform a few as desired by him. Such exception is not applicable to the tying of the protective thread. During the festival period, all the houses should be decorated so as to present an auspicious and divine appearance. Various types of musical instruments and various animals such as the elephant, horse, camel and others should be brought to the village. The streets should be cleaned well and water should be sprinkled over the streets. In front of each house, the ground should be besmeared with cow-dung and beautified with various designs and depictions formed with rice-flour. Auspicious fresh sprouts, special lamps, vardhani-kumbha filled up with consecrated water, plantain tree, betelnut tree, hangings designed with silk cloth and others, rows of darbhas, pearl-garlands – all such auspicious materials should be kept in each house, arranged in an orderly pattern. Light-posts should be installed in the upper level and base level of each floor. In the night time, rows of lighted lamps should be arranged in each floor. Even in a place where there are no houses, arrangements for festivities should be made.

Various types of colorful flags, various musical instruments, various renderings of songs set in different musical flows, various types of festival-umbrellas, small parosals and ‘camaras’, array of fans made of palm-leaf, incense, lights- all these should be arranged to take part in the procession. In each day, the specified vehicle should be kept ready during the day time and the night time. The festival-image should be mounted in the car or palanquin or on the head of the devotees appointed for doing the ceremonial services in the temple.

All those which are to be offered as cooked should be prepared by the twice-borns. All those which are to be offered as wetted may be prepared either by the brahmins or the sudras.

With regard to the fruits and vegetables, the Guru should see whether they are with or without rind, whether they are unpeeled or peeled and then purify them by casting his look energized with mantras and such other sacraments. Having offered the padya, acamana and arghya with the accompaniment of blowing of the conch, he should remove the screen and the things offered to the Lord. Then he should distribute the the things offered to the Lord to all the devotees who have assembled there, to those who have come there from adjacent or distant places and to others, according to their devoted state.

At the end of the procession, the festival-icon of Siva should be taken inside the hall of audience (asthana mantapa) or some other hall and placed on a large pedestal. Then, the Guru should offer to the Lord who is now present in the audience-hall padya, acamana and arghya and perform the snapana-bath and santi-homa (fire-ritual for appeasing). This should be done daily, during the festival. In order to nullify the defect of pollution caused to the car, icons and others by the touch of carpenter and other workers and by the look of the outcast and panas (singers who used to praise the king), such kind of special rituals should be essentially done. This rule should be known and observed. O, the foremost among the Gurus!, such special rituals should be performed at the end of procession in each day.

If he is not able to perform the ‘santi-homa’, it could be left out but he should essentially perform the snapana-bath. If my procession as mounted on a vehicle has taken place outside the five enclosures, he should arrange for the snapana making use of water collected up to a measure of five karis. Or, the measure of water may be forty bharas, twenty bharas or ten bharas or its measure may be less than ten bharas. He should perform the ceremonial bath to the Lord with snapanas, with dedication and devotion. On the day of ‘mṛga yatra’ (going out of the village to drive away the wild animals), snapana should be performed with special care, without fail. Performance of such activities in the time prescribed for each ritual would yield the desired fruits for the devotees.

The regular worship at the morning session, daily festival, entering the pavilion meant for the yaga, mounting the decorated icon on the car and on the vehicle, then the regular worship at noon-session – all these should be done in the prescribed order. If the Lord is in the festival-car, the worship should be done up to the offering of incense; if within the temple, worship should be done up to ‘naivedya’. Then snapana should be performed in view of the ‘yatra’. This should be followed by the occasional worship. At the end, the devotees should be enabled to have the ‘darsana’ (seeing the Lord with devotion and attention) of the Lord with the accompaniment of various wonderful events. This should be followed by the regular worship at the evening session. Once again the fire-ritual, holy darsana, circumambulating the village, yatra-snapana, regular worship with the accompaniment of dancing, singing and such other services- should be performed. Then, ‘entering the shrine along with Sakti’ should take place. Or, the icon of Siva alone may be taken inside, without Sakti.

If one day is divided into sixteen sessions, each session to be with a duration of half-yama, the offering of protective thread to the Deities should take place within the duration of half-yama. The activities concerned with the festival should take place in the scheduled time. Each activity should be fulfilled within the duration prescribed for that. The activities fulfilled in this way are capable of producing all the desired fruits. The activity completed in a time prior to its previous duration would become feeble. Similarly, the activity completed in a time after its posterior duration would become inauspicious. Therefore, the Guru should perform each activity in a duration prior to the actual schedule. If the scheduled time of an activity is marred with some inauspicious defect, he should perform that work in a time posterior to the scheduled time. The time of procession and of bali-offering may precede the scheduled time. The bali-pitha should be designed as detailed in the chapter dealing with the worship of the retinue Deities. The bali-pitha may be made of earth, wood or metal or it may be designed over the ground besmeared with cow-dung.

Without entering into the yagasala, the icon may enter directly inside the shrine. At that time, the Guru may or may not perform the offering of tāmṇula and other related activities. If the prescribed time is not adhered to, the Guru should perform the 'santi-homa'. In the night session, 'nirajana' should be performed after the offering of incense and lights. At the end of the duration prescribed for the procession, the Guru should offer the ‘prabhuta-bali’. In this way, the Guru should perform all the rituals, in each day. Some specific aspects with regard to these activities are told now.

Having taken the icon of Siva to the pavilion built in the outer street of the village and others or outside the village, the Guru should worship the Lord with all the offerings and arrange for the holy darsan of the Lord amidst various festivities. Then the icon may directly enter the shrine or it may enter after circumambulating the village, being mounted on the head of the sanctified paricaraka. If there occurs the downpour of rains unexpectedly, the icon may directly enter the shrine. If there are symptoms to indicate the immediate occurrence of downpour of rain or if the sky becomes very dark because of heavy clouds, the icon should be immediately moved to the shrine. To complete the remaining part of circumambulation, the Guru should perform the ‘santi-homa’.

In the day when the rituals of yagasala commence or in the day fixed for the offering of the sacred water, all the icons concerned with the festival should be taken in procession around the village. Expiatory rituals need not be performed on this occasion. If the circumambulation of the village is not performed, the Guru should perform the 'disa-homa'. On this occasion, the appearance of the full-moon in the spotless sky should be essentially observed. The procession of the icon and the bali-offering should be performed daily.

Five days or four days before the day fixed for the tirtha, the Guru should perform the ceremonial oil-bath to the image installed in the main shrine. This oil-bath may be associated with turmeric powder. In that day, the Guru should offer the oil and turmeric powder associated with tambula to the Lord and the Bhaktas. This oil-bath may be performed in other days also or in the day in which the flag is raised to the top of the pole. The Guru should place the vessel containing the oil over the tripod kept on the sthandila designed in front of the Lord.

Having sprinkled the consecrated water over the oil with the recital of astra-mantra, the Guru should take the oil with the recital of samhita-mantras. Having given the protection with the recital of kavaca-mantra, he should honor the oil with perfumes, flowers and other substances. Reciting the three tattva-mantras (atma tattva, vidya tattva and siva tattva) and the mula-mantra with ‘om’ in the beginning and ‘namah’ at the end, the Guru should apply the oil with flower and turmeric powder over the head of the Lord and anoint the the image from the fore-head to the feet and to the end of the shoulders. For the image of Sakti, he should anoint up to the neck. Having performed the bath in the same place or in other place, he should offer the ‘mudga’ food .

The procession of Nataraja should be performed in the day prior to the day fixed for the ‘tirtha’ or in the day prior to the previous day mentioned now(two days before the tirtha-day). For such performance, the Guru should tie up the protective thread in the right hand of Nataraja according to the directions set forth earlier, adorn Him with all kinds of ornaments and worship Him in a specific way suitable to the occasion. Then, having taken the icon of Nataraja to another hall or stage-like pavilion or to the audience-hall, he should adorn Him with all kinds of decorative materials and perform the circumambulation around the temple or village. O, the foremost Sages among the twice-borns!, having come back and entered the hall either in the same night or in the next morning, he should arrange for the holy darsana of the Lord amidst various festivities.

Having performed the ceremonial bath and other rituals related to worship in the early morning, the Guru should adorn the Lord with ornaments fit for the occasion. The incense with pleasant and mild fragrance should be prepared with various kinds of agaru-sandal mixed with camphor. Having circumambulated the temple or the village with the accompaniment of the sounding of all kinds of musical instruments, he should place the icon on the sthandila and perform the ‘punyaha-vacana’. Having sprinkled the consecrated water of arghya with the recital of astra-mantra over the icon, he should energize by chanting the brahma, anga, kala mantras pertaining to the Lord. Then, having worshipped with sandal, flowers and other substances, he should effect protection with the recital of kavaca-mantra.

Then he should offer the oblations into the kindled fire with faggots, clarified butter, cooked rice, sesame, parched paddy and molasses and such oblations should be done for one hundred times with the recital of mula-mantra. The homa known as ‘astra-homa’ may or may not be performed. The homa performed in the five fire-pits consecrated by sacramental rituals is capable of accomplishing all the desired fruits. Then, having offered the oblations for the sake of expiation with the recital of aghora-mantra, he should offer the consummate oblation(purna-ahuti). He should touch the materials kept for the purna-ahuti with the recital of sadyojata-mantra and offer the sandal and other materials with the recital of mula mantra.

Cow along with its calf, gold, bronze-vessel covered with a cloth, sesame, clarified butter and such others suitable for donating as gifts – all these should be offered to the Chief Acharya for his contentment. This offering associated with the offering of water is considered to be the ‘yatra dana’(gifts offered to the Acharya before the commencement of the procession). Turmeric , salt, sesame, white mustard, tambula, rice, perfumes, clarified butter, sesame-oil – offering of these substances is called ‘siva dana’. This is capable of yielding the desired benefits to the sponsoring Master (yajamana).

Offering of such materials as a part of worship to the Yogis, to those who observe the disciplines related to meditation, to those who have known well the deeper meanings of the scriptures dealing with supreme knowledge (siva jnana) is conducive to the welfare of all the living beings. The head-band(turban) and such other gifts of honor should be presented to them during these specific days. Such kind of presentation should be done every day associated with the offering of water. The highly learned Acharya should present the gifts of honor such as the turban and others to the yogis and scholars.

The Acharya is , verily, Lord Siva Himself. There is no difference between the Acharya and Siva. The one who conceives a difference between them will be subjected to downfall leading to hell. The knower of all the Agamas; person with serene composure; taking delight in being devoted to the worship of Sivalinga; maintainer of daily fire-ritual and such other austerities; preparing food to be offered to Siva; trained in offering graha-bali (offerings to the planet-deities) and other such rituals; giver of alms; untouched by despicable qualities- an Acharya is of such praiseworthy nature. What is the use of speaking elaborately on the greatness of such Acharya? O, the twice-born Sages!, when such an Acharya becomes highly pleased in a place, all the four goals to be attained by the human beings get accomplished in that place. This is true; true; I repeat, this is true; always true. Nothing but truth.

The one by whom the Acharya is deprived of his wealth and properties is declared as a thief, to be despicable in all the three worlds. Stealing his wealth is more heinous than stealing the properties dedicated to the supreme Deities. The effects of such sinful act cannot be resolved, even for thousands of kalpas. Therefore, having well understood the severity of the sin of committing offences to the Acharya, one should profusely offer the fees and valuable presentations to him. Whatever is given by him should be accepted with reverence and diligence. Whatever is instructed by him should be listened to and obeyed, since such listening and obeying would lead the person to the shore of liberation. So, this 'yatra dana' should be performed with great care. After the 'yatra dana', the Guru should offer the naivedya to the Lord. This kind of 'yatra dana' may be done either prior to or after the installation of Sivalinga and other images.

This kind of 'yatra dana' should be performed even in other occasions for the sake of assured victory of the Ruler. This dana(offering gifts and valuables) which is the foremost among all kinds of danas is specifically recommended even in various occasions such as the occurrence of eclipse and others. Having mounted the festival-icon beautified with all kinds of decorations on the palanquin designed to be in the foremost category, the procession should be commenced with the accompaniment of Sivacharyas and the sounding of murava(a kind of drum). The circumambulation may be done in the middle enclosure if the temple is with five enclosures or it may be done outside the temple. Then, the procession of the mounted icon associated with all kinds of auspicious accompaniments and festivities should take place around the village.

varjayedvātha muravaṁ rājaveṣadharānvitam 	322
praveśya bhavanaṁ paścāt snāpayet pūrva vartmanā

The procession should move being accompanied by those who have attired themselves in the likeness of the king, by various types of dancing, by those who are highly skilled in various arts and who are mounted on the palanquins and by those who, being in the front and back side of the car, are squirting the water mixed with flowers and with perfumes and doing other services. At the end, the festival-icon should enter the temple without the accompaniment of the sounding of the drum and with the accompaniment of those who have attired themselves in the likeness of the king. Then, the Guru should perform the ceremonial bath to the Lord in a perfect way as explained before.

Having removed the protective thread, the Guru should worship the Lord with sandal, flowers and other substances. At the end of this, the procession of the other icon should take place or it may take place prior to this. At the ending phase of the night, the Guru should mount the icon of Nataraja, the Lord of all Devas, on the processional car and the circumambulation of the car around the village and other places should take place in the same way as the procession of the previous icon mounted on a vehicle took place. At the end, Nataraja should be taken inside the temple. The Guru should again perform the snapana-bath to the Lord. For all other icons pertaining to the festival, the process is the same as this one.

In the day prior to the day fixed for the tirtha or in the day prior to the previous day(two days before the tirtha-day), all the activities should begin, with the accompaniment of the activities related to the commencement of a battle and with the accompaniment of the activities up to the end of ‘mruga yatra’. With such activities, the procession of other icons meant for the festival should be performed again. Snapana-abhisheka should be performed in a special way for each icon according to the process explained earlier.

savastrān vā vivastrān vā pradhāne vastrameva vā

For the sake of immersion in the sacred water(tirtha vari), the Guru should perform the offering of protective thread in that night according to the process explained before. He should install nine kalasas for the sake of tirtha, in that night. The kalasas should be with wounded thread, lid, darbha-kurcha, tender mango-leaves and new cloth. They may or may not be covered with new cloth. But, the main kalasa (siva-kumbha) should essentially be covered with new cloth.

sthaṇḍiladvitayaṁ kuryāt śulārthaṁ kalaśārthakam
paścime sthāpayet śulam tadagre kalaśānnyaset 	332

In the night the consecrated water should be kept ready in the kalasas. Or, it may be consecrated and kept ready just before taking bath in the sacred river. In the early morning, before the rising of the sun, the Guru should commence the rituals concerned with the sacred tirtha. Having approached the vicinity of the sacred river(or tank), the Guru should clean and purify the ground and design two sthandilas, one for the trident and another for the kalasas. The trident should be installed in the west and the kalasas should be arranged in front of the trident.

tajjalaiḥ snāpayet śulam nadyādyantaḥ praviśya ca 	334
tīrtha saṁgrahaṇaṁ kuryād gaṅgādyāvāhanena ca

Having declared the auspiciousness of the day and time, the Guru should invoke the presence of the Deities as done before. All the sacred waters and all forms of Durga should be invoked to be present in the trident. Manonmani should be invoked to be present in the middle leaf of the trident. Then, the Guru worship them with sandal, flowers and other substances. He should bathe the trident with the consecrated water kept in the kalasas. Then, having entered into the river-water, he should perform the 'tirtha sangarhana'(making the sacred waters to get assembled in the river-water) by invoking the presence of Ganga and other sacred rivers.

tīrtha saṁgrahaṇam kṛtvā tanmadhye prākśīro'nvitam 	337
triśūlam snāpayedapsu śivamantram anusmaran

“O, Devi!, Ganga, Yamuna, Narmada, Sarasvati, Sindhu, Godavari, Kaveri! Be present in this river-water with all your divine powers and render this water to be the supreme one for the sake of getting sacred water for Lord Siva; be present here until the setting of the sun to purify this river-water by removing its impure and polluted state”. Having recited this mantra, the Guru should bring out the confluence of all sacred rivers there and immerse the trident into the sacred water holding it in such a way that its head is in east, reciting the mula-mantra of Siva.

sarvālāṅkāra saṁyuktam praviśedālayam prati
homaṁ ca balidānam ca kṛtvā prāgukta vartmanā 	340

Then, having taken out the trident from the water, the Guru should place it on the river bank. The ‘tīrtha sangrahaṇa’ may be done in the sacred tank constructed near and for the temple. If the temple is without such sacred tank, the Guru should take the trident to some other water-source located in a distant place. Having adorned the trident with all kinds of decorative materials, the Guru should bring it back to the temple and enter the shrine. Then, he should perform the fire-ritual and ‘bali dana’ according to the process explained earlier.

triśūlam pūjayitvātau tato rātryadhivāsanam 	343

Then, ‘curnotsava’(powder-festival) should be performed in the audience-hall of the Lord. The Guru should design two sthandilas in front of the supreme Lord of the Devas. He should place the trident on the sthandila designed in the west and the mortar on the sthandila designed in front of the previous one. He should place the turmeric bulbs in the hollow of the mortar for the preparation of turmeric powder. Or, having covered the mortar with new cloth, he may put the turmeric powder inside the hollow. Then, he should worship the trident first and stay there in the night, keeping himself on fast.

saṁmukhaṁ vimukhaṁ vāpi śūlam devasya kīrtitam 	345

Having declared the purpose of the event, the Guru should identify the Adhara Sakti with the mortar and Isvara with the pestle and worship them. Then he should sprinkle the drops of ghee over the mortar and the bottom of the pestle with the recital of siro-mantra. He should collect the grass(durva), flowers, vrihi grain, rice and such others and keep them near the mortar. The trident should be placed as turned towards the Lord or turned in the same direction faced by the Lord.

The pestle should be placed in the same way as the trident. The mortar should also be placed similarly. The pestle may or may not be adorned with the cloth. The Guru should worship the pestle first and then the mortar. He should worship them reciting the tattva mantras, either starting with siva tattva or with atma tattva. The offering of durva should be done by the Guru or by a priest commissioned by the Guru. Then it should be offered by the king, queen, great authorities appointed by the king, Vedic priest and such other important persons and finally by the devotees of the Great Lord. It may be offered by the virgins dedicated to me and the ladies serving in the presence of the king. If authorities are not commissioned by the king for this purpose, it may be given by the Rudra-kanyas (virgins dedicated to Rudra) or Rudra-dasis or devotees or by others who are competent to do this.

The offering of durva-grass should be done by the good and pure persons as directed by the Guru. Such offering should be done in other occasions also for Siva and Sakti. This may be done after the offering of protective thread or before the offering of such thread and during the time scheduled for the ceremonial bath in order to induce auspiciousness in the ongoing rituals. At the end of such offering, the Guru should pound the turmeric bulbs three times, reciting the astra-mantra. The turmeric bulbs should be pounded with devotion and affection in heart, in the same order as maintained in the offering of durva. The pounding should be done with the recital of the specific mantra pertaining to the turmeric. When the pounding is completed, the Guru should collect the turmeric powder and place it carefully in various kinds of vessels. Such powder should be used specially for the Linga, various images, festival-icons and the trident.

One part should be kept for the sake of the retinue deities. In this way, the turmeric powder should be kept in various vessels, in the due order. The turmeric powder left over after placing it in various vessels for the Deities mentioned, should be reserved to be given over to the devotees. Or, if not the turmeric powder, perfumed oil alone may be kept in separate vessel for each Deity. Having sprinkled the consecrated water over the powder with the recital of kavaca-mantra, the Guru should worship it with the recital of hrudaya-mantra and induce the nectarine quality into that by displaying the dhenu-mudra. O, the twice-born Sages!, the turmeric powder should be offered following the directions set forth earlier, preceded by the offering of tambula.

The ‘curnotsava’ may be performed in the village and other settlements or in temple with the accompaniment of the trident. This festival should be done very quickly by the efficacious and skilled devotees or by the paricarakas (devotees appointed in temple for various services). The Great Tirtha should be performed in the ocean and such other large water-sources. The ‘tirtha sangraha’ should not be done in small tank or pond, like the tirtha preceded by the tying up of protective thread. O, the foremost among the twice-born Sages!, in such small water-sources, the tirtha-sangraha should be done with the accompaniment of the festival-icon adorned and mounted on a prapa or such other structure, arrangement of kalasas and invocation of the Deities. This may be done even without the presence of festival-icon.

If the ‘tirtha sangraha’ is not performed previously in a river or tank, it should be done in the sacred tank of the temple first and then the ‘maha tirtha’ should be performed. Having removed the protective thread from all the icons, the Guru should offer the threads to the devotees. This ‘maha tirtha’ should be performed associated with the sula-bera (weapon with a single prong), trident, with the trident and festival-icons brought from various temples in and around the village. Or, it may be done associated with the festival-icons mounted on lotus-like vehicle or wheel-like vehicle.

The 'tirtha' may be performed in the night, being associated with the presence of Mahamoti(a specific form of Durga). The tirtha should be performed in the day time. Tirtha performed in the noon is of superior kind; performed in the forenoon is of medium kind; performed in the afternoon is of inferior kind. In the day of lunar eclipse, the tirtha should be performed in the night, avoiding the duration of the eclipse. Such tirtha is considered to be the best. If it is done associated with Mahamoti, it is considered to be the foremost in the supreme category(uttama-uttama). In the temples located in the sea-shore, importance should be given to the lunar day. In all other temples, importance should be given to the lunar mansion.

It is said that the conjunction of both the lunar day and lunar mansion as applicable to the tirtha is very difficult to occur. The conjunction of the lunar day and lunar mansion occurring in the forenoon or in the afternoon should be given importance. It is best to perform the tirtha in the noon time, in the ocean-water or river-water. In the daytime, if the duration of the lunar mansion is longer than the duration of the lunar day, lunar mansion should be given importance. Similarly, if the duration of the lunar day is longer than the lunar mansion, lunar day should be given importance. If the lunar mansion and the lunar day(applicable to the tirtha) occur and continue in two consecutive days, the day in which auspicious yoga-aspect is present should be taken for the tirtha. If the lunar mansion applicable to the tirtha occurs twice in the same month, the lunar mansion which occurs in the later half of the month should be taken for the tirtha. But, even there, if the lunar mansion occurring in the first half of the month is associated with auspicious yoga-aspect, that should be taken for the tirtha.

In which month and in which lunar mansion the tirtha was being performed previously, the tirtha should be performed in the same month and in the same lunar mansion even in the current and continuing period. For the svayambhu-linga, daivika-linga, arsha-linga and manusha-linga, the lunar mansion taken for the tirtha previously should be taken even now and in the future. O, the foremost twice-born Sages!, if the tirtha-nakshatra occurs in two consecutive months, the nakshatra which occurs in the earlier month should be taken for the performance of tirtha, with egard to the savyambhu linga and others.

O, the foremost teice-born Sages!, the tirtha should be performed , after getting into the river or tank. The immersion in the tirtha is of two kinds: immersion along with the festival-icon and the immersion without the accompaniment of the icon. If immersion is done without the icon, the sanpana-bath should be performed after placing the icon on the bank of the river or the tank. Then, icon should be worshipped with all kinds of offerings such as sandal and others. Naivadya should be offered there. If not, it may be offered in the temple. The Guru, along with the devotees, should delight the Lord by performing various auspicious rituals and offerings.

This delighting activity may be done with or without circumambulating the village, associated with all devotess irrespective of caste distinction or without the accompaniment of such devotees. Then, the consummate oblation(purna ahuti), associated with all auspicious aspectsshould be offered. Taking the kalasas pertaining to the Lord, Sakti and Vidyasvaras from the yagasala, the Guru should hand over them to the paricarakas sanctified by him with sprinkling and lead them to come around the temple. Having placed them orderly in front of the Linga in the main shrine, he should contemplate the presence of the Lord and the Sakti in the Linga and the Pedestal respectively and the presence of the Vidyasvaras around the Linga, on the upper level of the Pedestal. Having sprinkled over the Linga, Pedestal and Vidyasvaras with the consecrated water contained in each kalasa pertaining to each of them, the Guru should perform the ceremonial bath for the all-pervasive Lord.

Then, the Guru should worship the Lord of all the gods extensively and abundantly, attending to all the major and minor aspects of a complete and perfect worship. Untying and lowering the flag is held to be of supreme nature, if it is done in that night. The lowering of the flag may be done in the third, fifth, seventh, ninth, eleventh, thirteenth, fifteenth, seventeenth or nineteenth day. Then, the Guru should perform the 'murti-homa' and then the 'disa-homa'.

If the duration of the total number of days decided for the festival is left over still, after the performance of the festival from the raising of the flag to the immersion in the sacred water, the Guru should once again begin the festival and perform the rituals up to the immersion in the sacred water. In the lunar mansion fixed for the lowering of the flag, the Guru should perform the suddha-snapana bath. Such snapana-bath should be performed to the Linga, festival-icon, Bull and the flag-mast. Having worshipped them according to the directions given in the chapter dealing with ‘archana’ (full-fledged worship), he should adorn the temple with decorative garlands. According to the availability of the resources, he should beautify the temple, from the main shrine to the gopura.

The Guru should diffuse the aromatic fumes raised from the ignited black-sandal(kalagaru) over the precincts of the temple of the Lord, offer various kinds of nivedana and delight the Lord with deep devotion and love. Then, he should worship Candesvara and perform the fire-ritual for Him. This fire-ritual may or may not be done. Next, he should offer the ‘grama-bali’ with the accompaniment of ‘anna linga’. This may done with the accompaniment of the trident or Candesvara. Various musical instruments such as the bheri, mardala, pataha, kahala, srikhanda, sankha and such others should be sounded very loudly. Having performed the grama-bali in this way, he should send off Brahma and other Gods who have assembled in the village for the sake of the festival, with due reverence.

The Guru should offer the bali, first to the flag-mast and then to the flag. Having withdrawn the Bull who is present in the flag, he should unite it with the Vrushabha installed in the temple. In the beginning and at the end of the ‘avarohana’ (lowering the flag to the base level), offering of bali is recommended.

Then, the sponsoring Master should honor the Acharaya by offering new clothes and gold rings to him. Offering of fresh sprouts, raising of the flag, staying and fasting in the yagasala, commencement of the fire-ritual, the beginning or the end of two sandhyas (sessions) or of one session of worship, festival of Nataraja Murti, immersion in the sacred water, performance of ‘suddha-snapana’ – in all these occasions, the Master should offer the honored-fees to the Acharya.

Offering of five nishkas of gold is of lower category; offering of ten nishkas is of medium category; offering of fifteen nishkas is of superior category. The honored-fees of the Acharya is to be known in this way. Half of the fees mentioned for each category is considered to be the three types of fees belonging to the lowest category. Twice the fees mentioned for each category is considered to be the three types of fees belonging to the supreme category. Or, another way of offering the honored-fees is mentioned now. One nishka, half a nishka or quarter of a nishka may be offered daily, during the period scheduled for the festival.

Then, the bahtotsava(festival to be conducted in honor of the devotees) should be performed. This bahktotsava may be performed fifteen days before the the day fixed for the tirtha. Or, this may be performed in the beginning or in the middle of the main festival. When the time for the performance of monthly festival intervenes during the yearly festival, the monthly festival may be performed with the accompaniment of bali, homa and others, procession of the festival-icon and such other activities. Or, it may be done without such accompniments. Or, the procession of the festival-icon alone may be performed. Even if two monthly festivals occurs, the Guru should conduct these festivals in the same way.

O, the twice-born Sages!, the monthly festival, mentioned here, should be performed in the same way as the one-day-festival is conducted. In a single month, one or many festivals may be performed according to their occurrence. The festival may be performed preceded by the offering of sprouts or without such offering. The one-day-festival should be conducted preceded by the beating of the drum. Having designed two sthandilas, the Guru should place the trident on one sthandila and place the drum on the sthandila which is in front of the trident. Then he should declare the auspiciousness of the day, time and the event.

Having sprinkled over the Astra Raja and the drum, the Guru should beat the drum according to the prescribed way. Then, he should tie up the protective thread on the festival-icon and the Trident in the due order. Having circumambulated the temple in the clockwise order, he should enter the yagasala and place the Trident over the sthandila. On the sthandila designed over the altar, he should place the kumbha meant for Siva along with vardhani-kalasa meant for Sakti. Around these two, he should arrange eight ghata(earthen pots) or eight kalasas for the eight Vidyasvaras. Then, having declared the auspiciousness of the day, time and the event, he should sprinkle the consecrated water with the recital of astra-mantra over the kalasas. He should place a lotus made of gold inside the siva-kumbha and the vardhani, both wrapped up with new cloth.

Both the siva-kumbha and the vardhani-kalasa should be wound around with thread and furnished with darbha-kurcha, lid, fruit and a bunch of tender mango-leaves. The Guru should worship Siva in the siva-kumbha, Sakti in the vardhani-kalasa and the eight Vidyasvaras in the eight kalasas placed around the siva-kumbha and the vardhani-kalasa. Having worshipped the gaurdian Deities of the entrance, on each side of the entrance, he should worship Nandi and other Ganesvaras in their respective kalasas kept over the sthandilas. These may be worshipped associated with festoons and eight auspicious materials(ashta mangalas) or without such festoons and ashta-mangalas. The ten weapons of the directional Deities may or may not be worshipped along with the Ganesvaras mentioned earlier.

The Guru may perform the fire-ritual either in the fire-pit or in the sthandila. There may be five fire-pits or sthandilas or only one fire-pit or sthandila. The oblations should be offered with the substances mentioned before. Then he should offer the 'grama-bali' (bali-offering for the welfare of the village). This grama bali may be offered associated with the corresponding festival-icon. The bali should be offered in this way, in the night time. In the next early morning, he should worship the Deities invoked in the yagasala. Then, he should perform the fire-ritual and offer the bali, associated with the festival-icon. Having entered into the temple at the end of the bali-offering, the Guru should perform the 'curnotsava' (powder-festival).

Then, the sacred confluence of the holy rivers(tirtha samgrahana) should be performed. Other details which have not been told now are to be known from what has been told earlier. These may be done in the early morning, without beating the drum. Having observed ‘adhivasana’ for a short period, the Guru should perform all these activities, as detailed earlier. These may be performed without conducting the ‘curnotsava’.

If there is a separate vehicle to be used in the offering of bali, the procession of the festival-icon should be done in the evening or pre-eve session(pradosha), leaving out the ‘tirtha’ activity. During the procession of the festival-icon and in the event of bali-offering which occur after the performance of ‘tirtha’, such procession should be done with another festival-icon. Another way of performing this is told now. The procession may be with the accompaniment of bali and homa or the procession alone may done, leaving out bali and homa. In all the days of the festival, the protective thread should be offered to the the festival icon meant for each day. This kind of rule has also been declared.

In this way, all such auspicious functions should be conducted in each year for the attainment of worldly enjoyments, if not , for the attainment of final liberation. Starting from the Sunday, specific weekly-worship should be done in the temple. In each day of the week, the Guru should perform the ceremonial bath to the Lord with panchamruta or with the snapana-related substances. He should worship the Lord with abundant perfumes, flowers and such other substances. In each day, he should offer a specific leaf to the Lord. The ground-lotus, apamarga, sriparna, tulasi, gokshura, bilva and vishnukranti – these are the specific leaves to be offered to the Lord, in the same order starting from Sunday.

Ornament made of diamond should be offered on Sunday; ornament made of pearls, on Monday; made of coral, on Tuesday; made of emerald, on Wednesday; made of topaz, on Thursday; made of vajra-gem , on Friday; made of sapphire, on Saturday. Other kinds of ornaments made of gold and precious stones, which are considered to be fit for adorning the Lord should be offered in all the days of the week. Flowers and clothes which are in same color of the gem applicable to each day should be offered, from Sunday to Saturday. The Guru should offer the foods(naivedya) prepared so as to be in the same color of the gem suitable to each day of the week.

At the end of the weekly special puja, the Guru should perform the weekly festival. The Sunday-festival should be performed for the attainment of the desired fruits. For alleviating the misfortunes which could occur due to the positions of the planets, for the good health specifically, for averting the calamities which could occur due to earthquake, to ward off other harmful effects and afflictions created by the planets – this special weely-puja should be performed in association with the weekly festival. Different kinds of perfumes, flowers and other subsatnces selected according to the gem specified for each day of the week may be offered. Or, such selection may be left out.

The details about the yearly festival, monthly festival and weekly festival have been told. O, the Lords of the twice-borns!, with regard to such festivals, there are some special aspects to be observed. The raising of the flag should be done in the forenoon, for the benefit of the brahmins; in the noon, for the benefit of the kshatriyas; in the evening, for the benefit of the vaisyas; and, in the midnight, for the benefit of the fourth caste. For the brahmins, the festival should be commenced preceded by the raising of the flag. For the kshatriyas, the festival should be commenced preceded by beating of the drum. For the vaisyas, it should be commenced preceded by sowing of the seeds. For the sudras, it should be commenced preceded by offering of the sprouts.

catussahasrakādūrdhve vaipre grāme mahattare ॥	437
purādau saṅkaro nokta utsavānām dvijottamāḥ ।

In the Nagara type of settlement, the festival should be commenced preceded by the raising of the flag. In the Mangala type of settlement, it should be commenced preceded by beating of the drum. In the Pattana type of settlement, it should be commenced preceded by offering of the sprouts. Likewise, in a village or other settlement where the sudras alone are living, it should be commenced preceded by offering of the sprouts. O, the foremost Sages among the twice-borns!, in a village or in a larger settlement where more than four thousand brahmins are living, the defect of pollution that could otherwise occur due to the mingling of people belonging to various castes would not occur, during these days of the grand festival.

The base(vedika) of the flag pole should be with a height of 7, 6, 5 and 4 spans(tala) when the flag-pole is meant for the brahmins, kshatriyas, vaisyas and sudras respectively. O, the twice-born Sages! when the flag has been raised for a festival, the flag should not be raised for another festival in the same village. But, the Bull-flag may be raised. Similarly, when a festival is being conducted in a village or city, another festival should not be commenced. But the festival of Siva may be commenced.

It is always best to fix a suitable nakshatra for the commencement of the rituals concerned with the raising of the flag and other activities so that it is beneficial to all the people of the village or city. The color of the flag should be white, red and whitish-yellow for the brahmins, kshatriyas and vaisyas respectively. For the sudras, the flag should be in the color of pale yellow. Or, the flag may be in white color, for all the people, irrespective of such distinction of caste. The beginning upper side of the cloth is considered to be the head of the flag and the ending bottom part of the cloth is the tail. When the flag is taken around the temple or the village in clockwise direction, the Guru may walk in front of the flag, leading the procession. Or, he need not go with the flag.

In the course of the performance of invocation of the Deities in view of the raising of the flag, gandhara-raga should be rendered in the east; kausika-raga, in the south; sri kamara-raga in the west; takkaraga, in the north. In this way, the concerned svaras should be rendered differently according to the variation of the directions. When the flag is being raised, all these four ragas or one of these four ragas may be rendered. From the raising of the flag up to the day fixed for the tirtha, grama-bali may be offered in the night of each day. Or, the bali for the Deities may be offered at the base of the flag-pole.

In a place where the daily festival is performed or in another place where other festival is conducted, the fire-ritual should be done. There may be four fire-pits starting from the north , in the order of clockwise direction, according to the differentiation as to the brahmins and others. Or, there may be only one fire-pit. A celebrate who has avoided his food on that day should attire himself so as to be in the form of Candesvara and contemplating himself so as to be in oneness with Candesvara should cut the flag-pole(if it has been temporarily installed). A new pole should be installed for the performance of minor festivals or pavitra-utsava or for the performance of the both.

The offering of sprouts for the raising of the flag should be done nine days before the tirtha; for the festival, seven days before the tirtha; for the tirtha, it should be done prior to the total duration held for the tirtha. All these regulations are applicale to all occasions and all places. The worship of the flag should take place in the noon. Or, it may be done in the night, after filling the kumbha kept for the Moon with the perfumed and consecrated water and worshipping it. O, the Gurus in the much exalted state!, when there is procession in view of the ‘mruga yatra’, the festival-icon which has been given the protective thread should be taken in procession to come out of the village.

In this Kamika Agama, it is told that the year-system is of two kinds – solar-based and lunar-based (saura mana and candra mana). The solar-based system is of superior kind and the lunar-based system is of medium kind. Another system of year known as ‘savana’ (based on nakshatras) is of inferior kind. To base the activities of the temple on savana-system is not desirable. During the period of the festival, activities such as installation of the Deities and others should not be undertaken. If such installation is inevitable, the Guru may perform the santi-homa first and then perform the activities such as installation and others. Or, the festival may be performed in a different way.

For the festival which is preceded by the raising of flag, the Guru should first raise one flag in a fixed auspicious day and time. In the same day, when the sun is setting down, he should declare the day fixed for the immersion in the sacred water to the village people through a person mounted on an elephant. Or, he may openly declare the day through a candala(one born in outcaste) associated with his spouse, directing him to declare the tirtha-day in a very loud voice.

The festival should be commenced in the same night, preceded by the beating of the drum. As done before, the Guru should place the trident in front of the festival-icon and invoke the Deities to be present in various parts of the trident. Without performing the grama-bali and others, he should make them hear the exact day fixed for the tirtha. Having completed these activities in the temple itself, the Guru should go to the river or the tank.

The foremost Guru should make two sthandilas on the bank of the river or tank and place the Trident on one sthandila and arrange nine kalasas according to the order, in another sthandila. Then he should bathe the Trident with the consecrated water contained in the nine kalasas and subsequently he should immerse the Trident in the river or tank water. Having performed these, he should come back to the temple and enter the shrine. He should commence the yagasala-rituals in the same day or in the tenth day, preceded by the offering of sprouts.

The Guru should perform the grama-bali and such other rituals, associated with the oblations made in a single fire-pit. He should do this everyday, along with the procession of the festival-icon in the daytime. In the fifth day, he should arrange for the collection of sand-particles. Having obtained the sand-particles, he should energize them with the recital of astra-mantra. Then, he should scatter these sand-particles over the inner enclosures of the temple and over the outer area. On the approach of the eighteenth day, he should sow the seeds for the purpose of getting fresh sprouts.

For the sake of tirtha, he should raise eight flags in the eight directions around the temple. Each flag in each direction should be with the depiction of the vehicle pertaining to that directional Deity(Lokapala). Similarly, all the flags should be with the depiction of the weapons of the Lokapalas. Or, all the flags may be with the depiction of the Bull. From that day onwards, the Guru should perform the fire-ritual in a special manner, being associated with the assisting priests(Murtipas). At the end of the fire-ritual, he should offer the bali, with the accompaniment of the procession of the festival-icon. Having performed all these for nine days, the Guru should arrange for the confluence of the celebrated holy rivers in the river or the tank.

The eight flags should be lowered in the same night. From that day onwards, circumambulation around the village in clockwise direction should be done being associated with various kinds of musical instruments, rendering of various songs set in music and the performance of various kinds of dance. Having completed the circumambulation, the Guru should arrange for the distribution of foods.

Having done these for seven days, the Guru should stop the play of all kinds of musical instruments, keep himself in silence and bathe the festival-icon. Candessvara should be in front, leading the procession and the festival icon should come behind Candessvara. The procession should be in the same manner all through the seven days. Such procession should be done with a spirit of devotion and love. Even without bali and homa, the procession may be completed. At the end, the Guru should perform ‘tirtha samgrahana’ with the accompaniment of Candessvara-puja, homa, snapana and the Trident.

In that night, the Guru should lower the flag, in the same way as done before. Even without performing the procession of the festival-icon on that day, the Guru may observe the rule and lower the flag. Having designed nine Lingas with cooked rice, the Guru should offer the bali. Such bali may be offered for the weapons of the Lokapalas in the village and other settlements with the accompaniment of the Trident. For the daily festival, he should design ten Lingas with the cooked rice.

Next, I will give you the directions for arranging and waving the lights(nirajana). This nirajana should be done in the night. Or, it may be done in the first half of the evening and such other sessions, at the end of the offering of incense(dhupa) and light(dipa). This should be performed in the festival and other such functions and in some other auspicious occasional events.

For the performance of the nirajana, the guru should make a sthandila(raised platform)or a mandala in the main shrine, front hall(ardha mantapa), in front of the snapana-array, or temple-kitchen and such other places and sprinkle the consecrated water over the selected place, with the recital of astra-mantra. Then, he should collect the vessels which should be polished and clean, along with holders of the light. These vessels should be designed according to the process explained in the section dealing with the designing of vessels meant for the offering of bali.

At the center of the vessel, a support(adhara) to hold the wick should be designed to be in the measure of one digit(matra) to nine digits, increasing the measure by quarter of a digit each time. Its width may be equal to the measure taken for the holder of the light and half of this measure should be its height. If the total length of the module taken for the holder is divided into eight equal parts, one part is known as yava and in this process, nine different measures could be obtained. The lip-part(edge) of the holder should be with a measure of two yavas and increasing this measure by half-yava each time, the maximum measure of the lip must be obtained up to one digit. Its thickness should be according to the size of the vessel. At its center, it should be provided with a hole, with a measure equal to half-yava.

The vessel may be designed so as to be in the form of lotus or of the base of the palika-vessel, in the form of dhuttura-flower or a hollowed plate(sarava). It should be provided with four or eight petals and with all kinds of embellishments. In a single vessel, there may be provided one wick-holder or five wick-holders or there may be nine wick-holders. These holders should be compact, with equal space between them.

The wick-holders may be designed with well-kneaded cooked rice. The vessels associated with wick-holders should be arranged for Siva, Sakti and other forms of the Lord. Especially, such vessels should be arranged in front of Nataraja Murti. Sesame, white mustard, salt, cotton seeds, cow-dung, kneaded flour, varieties of havis differentiated by various colors, leaves of vata and asvattha trees - all these should be kept in the four main directions and four intermediary directions in the due order. At the center, one light-vessel or five light-vessels should be placed.

Perfumes, arghya-water, flowers and vibhuti – these should be kept in the four intermediary directions, starting from the south-east. Nine light-vessels which are very bright with the burning wicks may be arranged in all places around the temple. The light-vessels should be with the wicks which are soaked with ghee and sesame oil. They should be identified with Brahma-mantras and Anga-mantras. The eight directional Deities, Brahma, eight Murtis, eight Murtipas, eight Vasus, Agni, nine Saktis-Vama and others, five kalas, five elements, various forms of Sivasakti, and five Karanesvaras –Brahma and others are declared to be the presiding Deities of these light-vessels. Or, Agni may be considered to be the presiding Deity for all the light-vessels.

The measure of sesame and other substances may be from one quarter of a prastha up to one adhaka, increasing the measure by one quarter each time. The number of the light-vessels may be as desired by the sponsoring Master. Having sanctified the light-vessels with sacramental rituals commonly applicable to such activity as explained in the section dealing with such sacraments, the Guru should light the wick, reciting the seed-letter of the fire. He should proceed to light the wick with the wick lighted already.

The Guru should direct the sanctified persons to keep themselves orderly and to hold the light-vessels with the accompaniment of the sounding of all kinds of musical instruments, sounding of the conch, musical renderings of various songs, performance of dance and so on. Or, he may arrange the light-vessels in such a way as to be held by ladies or paricarakas. Having placed the vessels holding the light over the tripod kept in front of the Lord, he should worship them. He should offer the padya with the recital of sadyojata-mantra and acamana, with hrudaya-mantra.

He should worship all the light-vessels with sandal and other substances with the recital of hrudaya mantra and others, each preceded by its own seed-letter. He should wave the light three times or one time, near the head of Lord Siva. Holding the light-vessels with his hands, he should worship them with the recital of tattva-mantras - atma tattva and others and give them to his disciple to be held in his hands which should be held to look like a lotus flower.

26

The disciple, on his part, should hold within his hands held in lotus-mudra, bowing down with reverence. Having taken in his hand the sacred vibhuti which should be white, pure, perfumed to be pleasantly fragrant and free from any sandy dust, the Guru should wave it near the head of Lord Siva three times and place it at the center of the light. Then, taking the vibhuti with the thumb and the ring-finger, he should mark a dot(tilaka) with the vibhuti on the five faces, forehead, heart and shoulders of the Lord in the due order.

He should mark the dot with vibhuti on the pedestal and on the left side of the Linga, contemplating the form of Sakti. If Sakti is present there in a manifest form, he should mark the dot on Her forehead and neck with the recital of mula-mantra or hrudaya-mantra. Then, he should apply the vibhuti-dot on the forehead, heart and shoulders of all the images and icons of various Deities .

Having taken a small quantity of that vibhuti, the Guru should offer it to Candesvara, Sivabhaktas, and other icons made of metal and other materials. Then, he should offer that vibhuti to all the devotees who have assembled there, after offering it to Desika(who recites the hymns).

Having taken all the light-vessels associated with all kinds of decoration as done before, he should come out of the main shrine of Lord Siva. Whether the light-vessels are with or without the flames of light, he should collect all the light-vessels from the shrine of Siva and place them in front of the bali-pitha and Vrushabha, on the top of the gopura, at the bottom of the specific tree (sthala vruksha) in the temple and in other places, in an orderly manner. The sponsoring Master may offer all the substances used in the nirajana to the Guru or he may burn them with the flames of lights.

The measure of sesame and other substances may be as desired by the Guru or the sponsor. This 'nirajana' should be performed even to the Ruler. But, on such occasion, Agni is the presiding Deity of all the light-vessels. This 'nirajana' may be performed when the coronation of the king is taking place, for the purpose of bringing victory to him. This may be done to a sadhaka when he is being blessed with 'Acharya Abhisheka' (empowerment of Guruhood), without the light-vessels. Instead of light, unbroken rice (akshata) should be made use of, in the daytime. In the night, 'nirajana' may be performed to him, making use of lights.

O, the foremost twice-born Sages!, now I explain the details concerned with the arranging of the rows of lights in a temple. Listen to these directions. In the month of Kartika(November-December) when the constellation known as Kruttika synchronizes with the full moon, the Guru should arrange for the arraying of lights in various places of the temple, at the time of sunset for the attainment of all the desired benefits.

The defects related to the eighth zodiacal sign and lagna should be looked into. Analyzing of the presence of vishti karana and vainasika star is appropriate for ascertaining the exact auspicious time. The duration from one fourth of yama before the sunset to the half of the yama after the sunset is considered to be very auspicious time for this function. Having ascertained the auspicious time in this way, the Guru should perform the ‘offering of fresh sprouts’(ankura arpana).

aṣṭadikṣu caturdikṣu triṣvekatra vā dvayoh̐	6

In the night prior to the day of the light-festival, the Guru should commence adhivasana(to be on fast , staying in the temple). He should install the light-post in front of the main shrine, in front of each gopura, in eight, four, three, two directions or in only one direction.

The measurement for the light-post is the same as told for the flag-post. The light-post may be made of coconut tree, palm tree, areca tree or the bamboo. Or, it may be made of the trees recommended for the flag-post. The Guru should yoke the spikes with the light-post. The length of the spike projecting from the light-post may be from 12 digits(angulas) to 50 digits, increasing the length by one digit each time. The breadth of each spike may be from 2 units of a digit to 6 digits, the increasing of the measure being one fourth of a digit each time. Its thickness may be one part out of three parts, half or three-fourth of the breadth.

The wooden spikes may be driven well into the light-post or well fastened to it. Starting from 9 spikes and increasing by one spike each time, the maximum number of spikes may be up to 27. These spikes should be yoked into the post installed in each direction. In this way, the spikes should be driven into the post in all other three directions. Three or four spikes designed with a measure as desired by the Master or the Guru should be joined specifically at the top of the post for holding the vessel meant for the lamp.

Then, he should join the ring-like structures made of selected trees with each spike and in each ring-like structure, he should array 8, 12 or 16 lamps. The rings may be covered with the dry leaves of coconut tree and such other trees in such a way that the covering is without any opening or hole.

He should provide an entrance in the south with a width of one hasta and a length of two hastas to climb and reach the top of the post. Such kind of arrangement is known as ‘kalpa’. Now, another mode of arrangement known as ‘anukalpa’ is told.

Without providing the wheel-like structures, the Guru may arrange the lamps in each spike. Such arrangement is known as ‘upa kalpa’(also known as anu kalpa). For this kind of arrangement, there is no need for the performance of fire-ritual or for the provision of conical covering with leaves of coconut tree. The arrangement of the lamps without installing the post is known as ‘akalpa’. The conical structure meant for the arrangement of the lamps should be designed in the main and intermediary directions and in between them. Lamps in large numbers should be lighted for each Deity of the temple.

The light-posts may be installed in large numbers so as to look like a row of garlands, so as to be in the form of an arch, in circular form or in the form of a prapa(an elliptical or square motif provided for the image). Having installed the posts in this way, the Guru should array the lighted lamps on the posts.

In the main shrine, gopuras, enclosures, shrines of the retinue Deities, various halls, bali-pitha and other structures, well, cow-stable, the Bull, temple kitchen, pavilion meant for the collection of flowers and such other places, the Guru should array the lighted lamps. Outside the temple and in the villages and other settlements, he should arrange for the array of the lights. This activity is known as ‘dipa avalī’ (arraying the rows of lights) and this should be done preceded by ‘adhivasana’ (being in fast and staying at the temple site).

The Guru should purify the light-post by sprinkling the consecrated water over it with the recital of astra mantra and worship it with the recital of pranava mantra. On the day before the day fixed for ‘dipa avalī’ he should dig a pit in the ground up to the depth of 6, 5 or 4 spans and install the light-post there. At the bottom of the post, he should construct an altar in the same way as it is constructed for the flag-post. This altar may or may not be associated with a lotus-design over it. Having sent off the sthapati who has constructed such an altar with due honors, the Guru should declare the auspiciousness of the time and the event.

The Guru should worship the light-post with a lighted lamp associated with sandal, flowers and such other substances. After tying up with the protective thread and having entered the precinct, he should do such worship. Having besmeared the interior ground of the pavilion of the temple, pavilion constructed for the performance of yaga or any other auspicious location which is charming to the mind with the diluted cow-dung he should design a sthandila there. Then he should sprinkle the consecrated water over it with the recital of astra mantra and place nine or five vessels or only one vessel. For all the Deities, the rules set forth in the chapter dealing with the process of waving the lights(nirajana vidhi) are applicable even here. Reciting the pranava mantra, he should worship the vessel with sandal and other paraphernalia.

śatamaṣṭottaram hutvā pūrṇāmante vidhāya ca 	32
devaṁ sāṅgaṁ visṛjyātha dīpanāropayedguruḥ

The Guru should construct a fire-pit or design a sthandila in the east side of the vessels and having kindled and worshiped Sivagni there, he should invoke the presence of Siva and His retinue Gods along with brahma murtis and anga murtis. He should offer 100, 50 or 25 oblations with faggots, clarified butter, cooked rice, cotton seeds and milk. One part out of ten parts of the total oblations offered with the mula mantra should be offered with the recital of anga mantras. Then, 100 oblations should be offered with the recital of the seed letter of the fire. At the end, he should offer the consummate oblation(purna ahuti). Having done this, the Guru should withdraw the presence of Siva and His retinue Gods from the fire and send them off.

Then he should fill up the vessels with sesame oil or ghee. Contemplating the all-encompassing form of Siva and reciting the seed letter of the fire, he should worship the vessels in due order, starting from the central vessel, with sandal, flowers and other substances and withdraw the presence of Sivagni from the fire worshipped in the fire-pit. After that, having taken the central vessel, he should light it with the light got from the Sivagni. He should adorn that vessel with all kinds of decorative materials and design it to be in the form of light known as 'taruna dipa'. Then, he should place it at the top of the light-post or on the sthandila, with the recital of hrudaya mantra. Upon the completion of the fire-ritual, the Guru may offer the protective thread to the light-post.

Then, in the second day, four conical structures(kutas), each one associated with an arch, should be designed in all the four directions. These conical structures may be with a diameter measuring 5, 4 or 3 hastas. The spikes yoked with them may be with an interspace whose measure may be as desired by the Guru or the sponsor. Or, only one conical structure may be designed either in the east or in the south-east. A fitting arch may be provided for that as desired by the Guru. All interior places should appear very auspicious and divine, being associated with arches, conical structures, rows of darbha and garlands.

The interior places should be adorned with all kinds of decorative designs and provided with plantain trees and betel-nut trees. Having beautified in this way, the Guru should perform the ‘punayaha vacana’ (declaring the auspiciousness of the day, time and event) when the sun is slowly setting down. Then, he should worship the light-post with sandal, flowers and such other substances. He should cover the bottom of the light-post with two clothes or single cloth.

The Guru should place a vessel made of gold or other metals on the top of the light-post. The learned Guru should take the wick made of the threads got from the cotton seeds and having soaked the wick in the sesame oil or ghee, he should place it in the container kept on the top of the light-post. Then, he should offer oblations related to the preparatory rituals and the common fire ritual.

In the pavilion, the Guru may perform the fire ritual either in the south-east or in the north-east. Brahma, Vishnu, Rudra, Isvara and Sadasiva are the presiding Lords of this fire ritual. Sadasiva is the presiding Lord of the light-post. The oblations should be offered with the faggots of palasa, vata, sami and arka in each fire-pit or the sami may be offered as oblation in all the fire-pits. Then the Yajamana should honor the Acharya by offering to him new clothes and ornaments made of gold. O, the foremost Sages among the twice-borns!, upon the completion of the consummate oblation, the Acharya should unify all the lights of the fire-pits and place it in a vessel reciting the hrudaya mantra associated with the seed letter of the fire.

A procession should be arranged so as to be associated with all kinds of decorations, to be charming with the auspicious fresh sprouts, associated with canopy, flags, festival-umbrellas, camaras, various kinds of musical instruments , varieties of dance-performance and the specific festival-icon. The procession may be without the festival-icon.

Either a house-holder or a celibate should take the light in his hands, climb the ladder quickly to reach the top of the post and being north-faced, should light the vessel placed at the top of the light-post. Then, having descended to the ground, he should respectfully inform the ongoing event to the Supreme Lord and make a humble entreat. On that time, all the lamps kept in the ring-like structures should be lighted from the top to the bottom of the post.

athavā kūṭadāhaṁ ca hitvānyat sarvamācaret 	53

Being north-faced, the learned Acharya should honor the Yajamana(the patron) who is instrumental for the performance of the light-festival, honor those who have rendered various services in this function with new clothes and other valuable gifts. Then, contemplating the form of the Fiery-Linga(Jyotirlinga), he should burn all the four kutas(conical structures). Or, without burning the kutas, he may perform all other activities.

prāsādādiṣu sarvatra dīpānāropayet tadā 	55

Keeping the festival-icon of the Lord under the arch, the Guru should circumambulate the light-post three times along with the devotees. Along with the lighted lamp, the icon should be taken in procession around the main streets of the village and after coming back to the temple, circumambulation around the temple should be done. Then the icon should be taken to the assembly-hall(asthana mantapa). At that time, lights should be arrayed in orderly pattern in the main shrine and in all other places.

marīci jīrakopetaṁ gulasāra samanvitam
aṅkurārpaṇahīnaṁ vā kriyāmenāṁ samācaret 	58

Having entered the shrine of the Deity, he should perform the ‘parivesha’(circumambulation within the main shrine)in a systematic way. Then, he should perform the special ceremonial bath (snapana) for the festival-icon according to the directions given before or he may desist from doing this snapana-bath. He should offer the ‘prabhuta bali’ , havis and tambula. He should specially offer the parched and flattened rice along with coconut fruit, pepper, jiraka and sugar. This festival may be performed even without the offering of fresh sprouts.

First, the ceremonial honorarium should be offered to the Guru and then to the assisting priests who have taken part in the fire ritual. All the materials and paraphernalia which have been used for homa and left over there, other materials used for making the kutas, posts and other related structures – all these should be offered to the Guru.

This light-festival may be performed in the same way even in the king's palace. O, the twice-born Sages!, this festival may be done in the brahma-sthana and other locations of the village. When the people of the village and the animals which are used as vehicles(horses, elephants and others) are affected by decay and diseases, this festival should be performed. Especially, performance of this light-festival is recommended for alleviating the diseases which are affecting the cows kept in the cow stable.

O, the foremost twice-born Sages!, the lunar day occupying which the sun rises is known as ‘sakala’ in both the bright half and dark half of the lunar month. The lunar mansion occupying which the sun sets is also known as ‘sakala’. This is applicable for every lunar mansion. Having known this significance, all the rituals should be performed in appropriate duration, adhering to the significant rules.

On the day of lunar mansion ‘ardra’ occurring in the month of Margasirsha(Dec-Jan), the Guru should worship Lord Siva, after mounting the festival-icon on the swing. This festival should be conducted along with the special ceremonial bath with clarified butter, adhering to the rules set forth earlier. If not these, the snapana-bath alone may be performed specially on this day, adhering to the specific directions.

The Guru should worship the Lord with sandal, flowers and such other substances and delight Him with the musical rendering of various songs. The festival-icon should be taken in procession around the village in clockwise direction and brought back to the temple. Or, the Guru may perform the bali-offering and fire ritual either in the daytime or in the night and circumambulate around the village with the festival-icon beautified with all kinds of adorning and decoration. This may be accompanied by the powder-festival(curnotsava). After performing the ‘immersion in the sacred water’, he should bring back the festival-icon to the temple.

O, the twice-born Sages!, then he should mount the festival-icon on the swing, in the evening, after adorning the icon with all kinds of decoration. Two pillars associated with the characteristic lineaments prescribed for the pillar should be installed. A crossbeam should be fixed above, joining the two pillars. The Guru should fix the swing between the pillars. The swing should be with a length of four hastas. It should be provided with four chains and the upper covering associated with various kinds of decorative features and motifs. Or, the swing may be provided with two chains.

The swing should be provided with a single swan-pedestal. The Guru should perform such activities as ‘punyaha vacana’, ‘prokshana’ and others. Having sprinkled the consecrated water with the recital of astra mantra, he should provide a seat(mentally) for the Swan over the wooden plank(linked with the chains)according to the procedure. He should worship the Swan on that seat with the recital of hrudaya mantra. Then, he should worship Brahma on the right chain, Vishnu on the left chain, Rudra on the crossbeam above and Siva on the upper side of the plank. He should worship Sakthi on the left side of Siva and worship Skanda in between Siva and Sakthi.

Or, the Guru may worship Sivasakthi on the wooden plank, separately with sandal and other substances. At that time, he should delight Lord Siva with the musical rendering of songs set to different melodies, performance of various dances and sounding of various musical instruments. This kind of swing festival which is efficacious in yielding the desired fruits should be done in other places also.

Performance of this festival in each day is recommended for the successful attainment of all the desired benefits. During this festival, moving of the swing forward and backward in a slow phase is desirable, after mounting the festival-icon on it. Or, such moving may be left out. In this month, especially in the day synchronizing with magha nakshatra, the Guru should offer 'payasa' cooked with specially prepared ghee to Lord Siva and Sakti. Such offering is also recommended to be done in this month.

In the month of Pushya(Jan-Feb), on the day of pushya nakshatra, the Guru should perform the ceremonial bath to Lord Siva and Sakti with honey. According to the directions set forth earlier, the procession of the festival-icon should be done at the end of the offering of ‘maha havis’. The patron who arranges for such honey-bath would attain the desired fruits.

In the month of Magha(Feb-March) and on the day synchronizing with magha nakshatra, the Guru should worship the Lord with a woollen blanket besmeared with perfumed clarified butter. He should take the ghee which should have been got from the cow-milk, which should be unmixed, free from insects and worms, devoid of bits of hair, fresh, pure and pleasingly fragrant and place it in a vessel.

He should pour that ghee into the water with the recital of astra mantra. Reciting the seed letter of Varuna, he should refine and consecrate that ghee by mixing kumkuma, agaru, turmeric powder and camphor powder with it and knead the mixture to become like a ball. Having placed it into the vessel made of gold and such other metals, he should fumigate it with aromatic incense and energize it with the recital of five Brahma mantras and six Anga mantras and then with Siva mula mantra.

tatpūrve sthaṇḍile dhīmān tarpayecchivapāvakam 	6

Then, he should perform a special kind of snapana-bath or he may perform the bath with the consecrated mixture of five substances got from the cow and that of five fruits. Having performed a special worship, he should place the ghee-vessel on a sthandila. Reciting the hrudaya mantra in a perfect way, the learned Guru should worship it with sandal and other paraphernalia. In the sthandila designed in front of it, he should offer oblations into the siva-fire for its contentment.

ghṛte saṁpātahomaṁ ca pavitrāroha vartmanā
kṛtvā saṁsthāpayetpūrvam sthaṇḍile sāpidhānakam 	8

Having offered the oblations with the faggots of palasa tree, clarified butter, cooked rice, sesame and parched paddy for 108 times, he should offer the consummate oblation. He should do the 'sarpata homa' (dropping the ghee from the ladle into the vessel containing the consecrated ghee, after dropping the ghee into the fire each time) according to the directions given for pavitra utsava. Having done this, he should place the ghee-vessel associated with the lid on the sthandila as done before.

liṅgaṃ sarvatra cālipyā pīṭhāntaṃ sarvapīṭhakam
gandhādyairarcayitvā tu kambalena ca veṣṭayet 	11

Then he should offer protection to it with the recital of kavaca mantra(avakunthana). He should worship it in the morning and the noon. As done before, he should perform the ceremonial bath to the Lord with snapana. Having worshipped Him in a special way making use of specific additional substances, he should adorn the festival-icon with all kinds of decorative materials , mount it on a pedestal and circumambulate the temple, reciting the mantras pertaining to Siva. Having come back to the main shrine, he should go near the Sivalinga and anoint the consecrated ghee over all parts of the Linga up to the bottom of the pedestal. All sides of the pedestal should be anointed with this ghee. Then, after worshipping the Linga with sandal and other substances, he should cover it with the woollen blanket.

In the same way, he should offer the havis along with ‘tambula’. Either in the succeeding session of worship or in the next day, the Guru may take off the woollen blanket and remove other items offered earlier. Then, he should worship the Linga as done before. Upon the completion of such festival, the patron should honor the Acharya and offer to him ceremonial fees in all possible grand scales. This festival may be performed preceded by the offering of fresh sprouts or may be performed without such offering.

This vowed observance(sivaratri vrata) was duly accomplished earlier by Devi(Sivasakti) and was performed by others(deities and sages)according to the rules prescribed for that. Because of such accomplishment, Devi attained blissful state being united with me. Others were enabled to experience much delighted state, having obtained all those desired by them. Those who observe this supreme vow would not be bound with the ropes hurled by the servants of Yama who cast dreadful looks with their protruding eyes. They would not see even Yama. And, they will never go to the hellish worlds.

Now listen to the detailed process of that worship, which is acceptable to all followers. The night time of the day which synchronizes with the fourteenth lunar day of the black-half(Krishna paksha) in the month of Magha is known as “sivaratri”. Such night is conducive to the attainment of the fruits of all meritorious deeds. During that night, Lord Siva should be worshipped who has manifested in the form of Sivalinga in the Siva-temple.

śivāsanam prakalpyātra mūrtim vidyātanaṁ tataḥ 	7

On that auspicious day, the Guru should be on fast in the forenoon, after taking the ceremonial bath in the prescribed way. The concerned rituals should be performed with diligence being assisted by his disciples (sadhakas). Having completed the five kinds of purification according to the directions set forth earlier, the Guru should contemplate the seat for the Lord and then the relevant form of the Lord and identify His vidya-body (body constituted of pure consciousness)with that form.

gandhodakena vidhinā ghṛtādyaiḥ abhiṣecayet 	9

Having invoked Him and effected His vibrant presence there, he should worship Lord Siva by offering the padya, acamana and arghya. Then he should worship Him with sandal and other substances and anoint the Linga with perfumed oil, rub the whole form with flour and clean it. Then he should bathe the Linga with the mixture of five fruits and that of five substances got from the cow according to the directions laid down before. Then he should bathe the image with perfumed(sandal)water, ghee and such other recommended liquids.

nālikerodakenaiva taṁ paścādabhiṣecayet
gandhodakena mūlāṅga brahmabhiścābhiṣecayet	12

Then, he should bathe it with the water mixed with five kinds of purifying leaves and with five kinds of herbal roots in the due order. Again, he should clean the image with flour, myrobalan fruit, powders prepared from the recommended grains and turmeric powder after purifying them with incense with the recital of astra mantra. After this, he should clean the image with pure water. In the same way, he should bathe the Linga with coconut water and diluted sandal-paste. All these should be done with the accompaniment of mula mantra, brahma mantras and anga mantras.

He should wipe the image with pure cotton cloth. Then he should cover the Linga with pure cloth made of silk and other such materials fit to adorn the gods. During each session(yaama) of the night, he should worship the Linga with sandal, flowers and other substances arranged and kept separately for each session. The Linga should be worshipped with sandal, agaru, camphor, saffron and others in the prescribed order.

In the first session. 'payasa'(rice boiled with milk , sugar and green pulses) should be offered as naivedya. In the second session(yaama) 'krusara-food' (rice boiled with molasses, sesame and ghee) should be offered. In the third session, 'gulannam'(rice boiled with molasses and ghee) should be offered. In the fourth session, 'suddha-annam'(unmixed, pure boiled rice) should be offered associated with cooked vegetables seasoned with condiments. At the end, 'tambula'(betel leaf and mouth-perfumes) should be offered along with ghee and pieces of molasses.

Having offered the incense along with ‘aratrika’(waving the light placed in a vessel) to the Lord, the Guru should perform the fire ritual in a specific way to suit the occasion, either in a fire-pit or in a sthandila. Having created the fire in the fire-pit itself or having placed the fire brought in separate vessel, the Guru should manifest the siva-fire there, preceded by the performance of sacramental rituals concerned with the fire-pit. Then he should ideate a seat for the Lord in the heart of siva-fire, worship Him and offer the oblations in the well-kindled and blazing fire.

He should offer the oblations with faggots of the recommended trees, clarified buter, rice cooked specially in the sacrificial hall(havis), parched paddy and sesame with the accompaniment of mula mantra, brahma-mantras and anga-mantras. The oblations for other mantras should be one tenth of the total oblations offered with the mula mantra. Or, such oblations may be for 10 to 50 times, increasing the oblations by 10 each time. Then he should offer the consummate oblation(purna ahuti) meant for completing the activities left out unintentionally, praise the Lord and offer the sacred ashes collected from the fire-pit to Him with a fitting entreat.

He should worship the Lord again and again in the same way, in each consecutive session. If he is unable to do all these rituals by himself in each session, he should let others who are his own disciples to perform these activities. Having spent the night keeping himself at vigil, he should come out in the early morning, perform the daily activities such as bath and others, come back to the shrine and perform the snapana- bath to the Lord according to the prescribed directions and worship Him as done before. Then the yajamana(sponsor) should worship the Guru and honor him with ceremonial fees, desisting from being guile without considering his wealthy state and resources.

Then the sponsor(yajamana) should honor the devotees who are wearing the linga , devotees of Siva, brahmins and the guests according to his capacity and availability of the resources and with devotion. After this, he should complete the special puja of this specific occasion(sivaratri). Having come back to his home with his relatives and dependents, he should clean his feet and hands and conclude the fast by taking food.

The minimum quantity of sandal should be 8 palas. Increasing the quantity by one pala each time, the maximum quantity may be 1000 palas. The quantity of agaru should be half the quantity of sandal . Or, it may be half or quarter of half the quantity of the sandal. The quantity of saffron should be half the quantity of agaru. Or, it may be one fourth or one part out of eight parts of this quantity. The quantity of camphor may be half or one fourth of the quantity of saffron or it may be twice the quantity of saffron. Having mixed all these substances and kneaded well, the Guru should fumigate it with the mixture of perfumes. Then he should worship it with sandal and flowers and energize it with all the mantras relevant to the occasion.

Now I will give the directions for adorning the Linga with garlands of damana-plants. Such adorning is capable of yielding the benefits which could be derived through japa and others done in the whole month of Caitra. In the days of yore, a Bhairava called Damana manifested from the anger of Lord Siva. All the celestial beings and the demons(asuras) who were with mighty powers were all subdued by this Bhairava. Pleased by his appearance and by his controlling power, Lord Siva blessed him and said: Let you become a plant in this Earth. Having acquired absolute controlling power, you are going to be a source of my enjoyment. Those human beings who worship and enable others to worship Lord Siva with your tender leaves and other parts would ascend to a supreme abode due to the greatness of damana-plant. Those devotees who perform again such worship with damana-plants in the prescribed specific manner would be rewarded by me with the meritorious benefits declared to be derived through worship in the whole month of Caitra.

śivakāryaṁ samuddiśya netavyo'si śivājñayā 	7
evaṁ damanaṁ āmantrya saṁrakṣya bhavanaṁ vrajet

Either in the seventh lunar day or in the thirteenth lunar day, the Guru, having approached the place where the damana-plants have grown, should purify the plant with the recital of astra mantra and worship it with the recital of saṁhita mantras. Then the Guru, the knower of the significance of the mantras, should inform and entreat the plant with the words revealed by Siva: “O, Damana-plant! you have manifested here due to the grace of Lord Siva. Accord your immediate presence here. According to the order given by Siva, you are being shifted from this place in view of the activities concerned with Lord Siva”. Having invoked the damana in this way, he should protect it (with kavaca mantra) and reach the temple.

If the damana is to be brought from a distant place, it should be plucked up from the ground along with its roots and the earth adhering to them, place it in a vessel filled up with earth and sprinkle the water over it. The learned Guru could perform the invocation even in the house itself according to the directions given earlier.

On the approach of evening, the Guru should perform ‘adhivasana’ (staying in the temple, being on fast). Having collected the essential substances needed for the fire-ritual and having completed the ceremonial bath and such other purificatory rituals, he should worship the Sun, Siva and the Fire according to the prescribed system.

He should place the damana along with its roots and earth in the western side of the Lord and worship it either with sadyojata mantra or with hrudaya mantra; place the myrobalan fruit along with its stalk in the northern side of the Lord and worship it either with vama deva mantra or with siro mantra; place the vessel containing the bhasma in the southern side of the Lord and worship it either with aghora mantra or with sikha mantra; place a tooth-brush along with a flower in the eastern side of the Lord and worship it either with tatpurusha mantra or kavaca mantra; and he should place a fruit associated with sandal in the north-east of the Lord and worship it either with the mula mantra or with gayatri mantra.

Holding the two hands to be in ‘anjali mudra’, he should take the damana-plants to be in five parts along with flowers and unbroken rice(akshata) and humbly inform the Lord of the worlds : “ O, Lord of the Devas!, You have been invoked here by me in a suitable time for accepting the offering of damana-plants. O, Lord!, with your gracious permission, let this offering of damana be fulfilled perfectly in such a way that it yields the desired benefits”. Having entreated the Lord in this way, he should place the bunches of dmanas along with flowers held in the hands kept in anjali-mudra over the head of the Linga with the accompaniment of the recital of siva-mantra and do the incantation of the mula mantra and perform such other related activities. Having placed the remaining parts of damanas in the vessel, he should close it with a lid with the recital of tatpuruṣa mantra. Then he should do the ‘avakuntana’(giving protection) with the recital of kavaca mantra according to the direction given for the offering of sacred thread(pavitra utsava). Having performed the protective activity in a perfect way, he should humbly inform the Lord about the activity.

Then, he should eat havis only in the night or he may keep himself on fast consuming the air(that is,without taking anything). Being in front of the shrine ,he should keep himself awake all through the night, spending the time by meditating, singing, repeating the mantras and such other activities. Then, in the early morning, he should take bath and worship the Lord of the worlds with eight flowers. Having completed the daily worship and the occasional worship, he should perform specific worship as suitable to the occasion.

He should worship the Lord with damanas , having made them into five separate parts. Having taken the remaining damanas in the hand held in ‘anjali mudra’ along with flowers and akshatas, he should meditate on the Lord to be in the form of Sadasiva who is with five faces. Reciting the mantras pertaining to atma tattva, vidya tattva and siva tattva, each one associated with its presiding Lord - Isvara, Sadasiva and Siva respectively, he should worship Siva in the due order according to the directions given for the offering of sacred threads.

śūlapāṇiṁ caturthyantaṁ namaskārantamācaret 	25

The first three mantras starting from the atma tattva, should be recited as associated with the second, fourth and the sixth vowels added with bindu and the damanas should be offered three times with the accompaniment of pavitra mantra. The damana should be offered for the fourth time with the recital of mantra constituted by pranava and siva mantra. The damana should be offered for the fifth time reciting the mantra constituted by the words ‘makhesvaraya’ , ‘ipsitam makaham puraya’ , ‘sulapanine namah’.

The Guru, who has known well the process of such worship, should prostrate before the Lord and worship Him and proceed to perform the fire-ritual. Then he should entreat Lord Siva who graciously grants all the desired fruits: “O, Bhagavan!, in my offering of damana which is of the nature of fulfilling the desired fruits, those which have been done by me excessively or in a deficient way, let all of them become fulfilled in a perfect way.”

The sponsor(sadhaka), having perfectly fulfilled the offering of damanas in this way, should perform the Gurupuja which is of the nature of yielding a perfect delighted state and honor the initiated assisting priests to their heart-content. The devotee, either a house-holder or celibate, who performs the offering of damanas in this way according to the settled directions is sure to derive the benefits of puja, japa and others being done through the whole month of Caitra.

It has been ordained that in the same month of Caitra, the spring-festival which yields the benefits as desired by the devotees should be performed. In the day prior to the spring-festival, the protective thread(raksha bandhana) should be tied up to the festival-icon meant for such festival. On the day of the festival, the festival-icon , beautified with all sorts of decorations and adorning, should be taken to the pleasure-garden which is associated with various kinds of trees, abounding in various rows of flowers, which presents variegated appearance with various kinds of fruits, which is resounding with various musical songs , various musical instruments and various dances, which is provided with playful vehicles, which is associated with walk-paths strewn with various kind of flowers, which is with various pleasant smells, where various kinds of flags have been displayed, which has been illumined with blazing lights, which is associated with assembly-hall and with a pond in which people could play splashing water on one another.

When the sun is setting down, the festival-icon should be brought in procession, circumambulating the village through its main streets and placed in the selected location of the pleasure-garden. The festival-icon should be decorated and dressed beautifully to suit the occasion and worshipped in a special way with all kinds of offerings, with sandal paste, incense, flowers, garlands and such other materials.

Having contemplated Vasanta(Kamadeva) who is holding the flower-arrows as having come over there to have the sacred view of the Lord and to offer his services there, the Guru should invite him to be present in right or left side of the Lord and worship him with various substances such as sandal, flowers and others. They should be worshipped in the Kumbhas decorated with golden cloth and others. Or, they may be worshipped in the sthandilas strewn with various flowers. Having covered the naivedya-vessel with a cloth, he should offer ‘payasa’(rice cooked with milk and sugar). At the end, he should offer ‘tambula’ (betel and mouth-perfumes) and delight them with special performances. The night should be spent with dances, playing of musical instruments and singing of divine songs. Having spent the time in this way, the Guru should again bring back the festival-icon to the temple.

Then, the Guru should arrange for the snapana-bath and worship the Lord with various substances specially arranged for this occasion. In this way, the donor should sponsor the worship of the Lord with specially arranged materials, with devotion and diligence. A devotee who arranges for such worship will attain all the fruits desired by him.

Now, according to the sequential order of monthly festival, I will give the directions for performing the 'cool-pot' ritual, with all specific details. This should be performed on the day synchronizing with the lunar mansion 'vaisakha' occurring in the month of Vaisakha(May-June). Rules have been laid down for such performance when there is severe drought in the country, to ward off all kinds of misfortunes, to appease all kinds of portent which indicate disasters, under the context of all sorts of penitential deeds, when the village is affected with conflagration and such other calamities, when the cattles are affected with severe diseases, when there is a wide-spread fever, plague or unfavorable indication of epidemics in the village and such other situations.

A tripod should be made with the timber got from the trees recommended for the sacrificial rituals of the temple. The height of the leg of the tripod may be from eight digits(angulas) to one hasta, increasing the height by one digit each time. The legs should be equally spaced according to the size of the tripod. Having made such a tripod, the Guru should sprinkle the consecrated water over it and cover the three legs with a fresh cloth. Brahma should be worshipped in the right leg, Vishnu in the left leg and the Bull in the leg behind these two legs. Mahamaya should be worshipped over the upper plank of the tripod. All these Deities should be worshipped with the recital of specific mantra pertaining to each of these Deities.

pidhānena samopetaṁ pallavena samanvitam

Having made and worshipped the tripod in this way, the Guru should keep it over the head of the Linga. In the pavilion(in front of the shrine), he should design a sthandila(a raised platform) with eight ‘dronas’ of saali-paddy, rice, sesame and parched pady and place a kumbha at its middle. The kumbha which is filled up with 4 dronas of water is of superior variety. The kumbha which is filled up with three dronas of water if of medium variety. The kumbha which is filled up with one ‘khari’ of water is of lower variety. The kumbha should be wound around with threads. It should be with red color, like the color of a well-ripe bimba-fruit; well covered with cloth and provided with a bunch of darbha-grass(kurca); deposited with gold lotus-flower and five gems; should be with an auspicious appearance. It should be provided with a hole at its bottom associated with an outlet-pipe made of gold. The pipe should have been made of one nishka, two, three or four nishkas of gold and it should be with a length of four digits. It should be with a tip provided with a small hole, in the likeness of a needle. The pot should be with a lid and tender leaves of mango tree.

praṇavaṁ śivamāvāhya gandhādyaiḥ samyagarcayet 	14
pradhāne copakumbhe ca kriyāmenāṁ samācaret

The Guru should place an additional kumbha associated with cloth, gold lotus, gems and others, in front of the main kumbha. The additional kumbha may be without the hole at its bottom. This may be placed on the right side of main kumbha also. Then, he should ideate the seat in the kumbha for the Lord and the suitable form(murti) and invoke His presence there. He should ideate the ‘vidya deha’ with the recital of brahma mantras, anga mantras and the 38 kala mantras. Having invoked Lord Siva who is identical with the Pranava letter ‘OM’ to occupy that vidya deha, he should worship well with sandal, flowers and other substances. He should perform such rituals in the main kumbha and the additional kumbha.

hṛdā saṁpūjya gandhādyaistato homaṁ samācaret 	18

For the sake of obtaining all the benefits, he should add sandal-water or milk in the kumbha. In the case of penitential rituals, warding off the effects of portentous occurrences and the removal of misfortunes and diseases, he should add the mixture of five substances got from the cow(pancha gavya) or pure water. Or, he may add perfumes and sandal along with bhasma(vibhuti). Or he may place the perfumes used for the preparation of 'acamana-water'. The recommended substances free from the hair-bits, insects and worms should be placed in the additional kumbha. Having worshipped the kumbhas with sandal, flowers and other substances with the recital of hrudaya mantra, he should perform the fire-ritual.

The fire-ritual may be performed in nine or five fire-pits or in one fire-pit. The oblations should be made with faggots, clarified butter, cooked rice, sesame, parched paddy, honey and herbal creepers. The faggots should be got from the vancula tree. All these things should be offered with the recital of varuna mantra. The Siva mula mantra should be recited by joining the seed letter of nectar(amruta bija) in the beginning the words of ‘apya dharana’ (‘apyamruta dharaam juhomi’) at the end. Reciting the mula mantra in this way, each substance should be offered as oblation for 1000, 500 or 108 times.

The incantation of the mula mantra associated with the seed letter of nectar-like water should be done separately , according to the same number of oblations. Those who are skilled in doing the incantation of the mantras and who are eight in number should repeat the varuna mantra. The mantras which begin with words ‘apayasya’ and others should be repeated with devotion and involvement by those who are experts in the four Vedas. The incantation of the essential mantras fitting the context should be done by the learned Sivabrahmins who have perfectly done the ceremonial bath, who have been well trained, who subsist on taking the havishya food(remnants of the rice cooked for the fire-ritual), who have fixed their mind on the Lord of the occasion alone, who are with contented heart, who are intent on carrying out the directions and instructions of the Guru, who have been consecrated with siva-diksha and who are intently wishing for the seasonal downpour of rain and the abundance of resources.

The Guru and the devotees should should water all over the enclosures of the temple, both in day time and night time. During that period, the concerned persons should arrange in a special way for milking the cows. If the streams of milk issuing out of the udder are in thousand, in five hundreds or in one hundred, such streaming would indicate the occurrence of plenty of rain-fall in the immediate future.

O, the foremost among the twice-born Sages!, these should be done every day during the time of fire-ritual. During the worship and at the time of offering the consummate oblation, the Sivabrahmins should recite the mula mantra ending with the word 'vaushat', contemplating the mantra to be of the nature of auspicious nectar. This repetition should be done daily, associated with the sounding of the conch. At the end of daily worship, the Guru should perform the occasional worship. If the occasional worship seems to be essential and long-timed one, such occasional worship be done first.

The Guru should bathe the Supreme Lord of the Devas with the cool water associated with various kinds of perfumes, contemplating the sprinkling of nectar-drops over the Linga and consequently bathe the Lord with snapana kalasas. He should worship the Lord with sanadal, agaru, camphor, abundance of saffron, perfumes and various kinds of flowers which have blossomed afresh at that time.

He should offer the aromatic vapor issuing from the black agaru; lights designed with wicks drenched in purified ghee and mixed with camphor powder; plenty of ‘payasa’ freshly cooked at that time, cooked sali-rice kept in the newly made earthen vessels; plenty of cool and perfumed drinks collected in new vessels; tambula prepared with white betel-leaves and nuts freshly got from the areca trees and the perfumes for the mouth(mukhavasa). All these should be offered with the accompaniment of the singing of various songs, sounding of various musical instruments, dances exhibiting nine kinds of sentiments, singing of various hymns and the Vedic suktas noted for the invigorating intonations, proclamations of victory(jaya ghosha) raised by those who are doing the incantation of various mantras and the sounds marking the obeisance. In this way, the Guru should worship the Lord daily, until the desired benefits get fulfilled. At the end of these, the performance of fire-ritual is recommended for each day.

For the first day, there is this kind of specific direction: At the completion of the consummate oblation, the two kumbhas should be lifted up carefully. Holding them on the shoulder or on the head, the Guru or the assisting priest should come around the temple in clockwise direction. In an auspicious day, synchronizing with the lunar mansion(nakshatra) selected to be favorable to the Acharya and the Yajamana(main sponsor) and with auspicious lunar day(tithi) and lagna, the Guru should place the kumbha provided with a hole at its bottom over the tripod, reciting the mula mantra of Siva. Then he should pour the consecrated water kept in the nine pots into the holed kumbha placed at the middle of the tripod, contemplating the downflow of streams of nectar and reciting the mula mantra of Siva. While doing so, he should be facing the north direction.

As the chief sponsor, the King should honor the Acharya at the beginning of this special ritual with new clothes, ornaments to be worn on five parts of the body and sacrificial fees which may be from 10 nishkas of gold. At the end of the ritual, he should honor the Acharya with twice the offerings and fees given in the beginning. For all other assisting priests, he should offer new clothes with golden fringe and gold ring and one nishka of gold as the sacrificial fees. These should be offered by him with delighted heart and diligence.

For the sake of sumptuous food, the king should offer them rice associated with vegetables and seasoned condiments and tambula(betel leaf and areca nuts), with delighted heart and diligence. During the course of this special ritual, good food should be offered daily to the devotees, sages and saints, those who have been rendered helpless and the orphans. At the end of the ritual, the Guru should perform the ‘snapana abhisheka’ and offer the havis abundantly.

In the month of Jyeshtha, on the day synchronizing with mula-nakshatra, the Acharya should worship the Lord with tasteful fruits. Such worship should be done associated with special snapana, mixture of five fruits, special kinds of offerings, ‘payasa’ and special fire-ritual to be carried out with recommended faggots, clarified butter and cooked rice.

In the next session of worship or on the next day, the Guru should take out the covering fruits from the Linga and the pedestal. At the end of this specific worship, the main sponsor(yajamana) should honor the Guru with the offering of new clothes and gold ornaments. Through such kind of specific fruit-worship, whatever be the fruits desired by the yajamana, they would get accomplished within a short time.

The Guru should tie up the protective band(kautuka) in the left hand of Devi(Sivasakti) in the night prior to this special worship, according to the directions given earlier for such offering of protective band. Or, the protective band may be offered to Siva and Sakti, in the early morning. On the same morning, the Guru should honor the virgin ladies by offering to them gold and other valuable ornaments, new clothes and food and offer milk to the Sakti. Then, the festival icon of Sakti should be beautified with all kinds of decorative items and should be taken in procession around the village, in clockwise direction.

The festival icon of Sakti along with the Trident(Astra Raja) should brought near the river bank or such other water-sources. The Guru should design two sthandilas with sali-rice and other grains. He should place the festival icon and the Trident on one sthandila and arrange the kalasas on the sthandila in front of the previous one, according to the directions given for the snapana-arrangement. The Guru should worship them with flour and fruits, reciting the hrudaya mantra. Then he should bathe the Trident with consecrated water kept in those kalasas. Consequently, he should perform the ‘avagahana’(immersing in the river water) along with the devotees. Then the festival icon and the Trident should be brought back to the temple.

Or, the icon may be taken in procession around the village in clockwise direction, preceded by bali and homa either in the night time or day time. The festival icon should be beautified with all kinds of decoration and taken around the village, surrounded by various groups of devotees. The Guru should offer various kinds of tasteful fruits associated with pieces of molasses, flour, various kinds of sweet cakes and dry fruits to the Deity kept on the river bank. Then, the molasses, fruits and flour should be left out in the north-east of the river bank. In the presence of Deva and Devi on the bank, the Guru and the devotees should reach the fresh river-water and immerse themselves there. Or, such immersion may be done along with the Trident.

The Acharya who is an expert in the science of mantras will be affected by mental derangement, if proper expiatory rituals are not performed by him in order to alleviate the defect of violating the rules. If the expiatory rituals are not performed, the Instructor(Desika) will become a diseased person; the Putraka(the disciple who has been given visesha-diksha) will be rendered to be bereft of any worldly enjoyment, being impeded in each birth; the Samayi(the disciple who has been given samaya- -diksha) will not be considered as the one who is observing the rules pertaining to Samayi, even though he may be observing those rules. Therefore, the purificatory ritual has to be performed inevitably, in a systematic way prescribed for that.

Many violations and omissions are being committed every day by word, mind and body and these push down the sadhakas to the hellish worlds. Since this sacred activity protects the sadhaka from falling down into the miserable worlds, it is characteristically called ‘pavitraka’. Ashadha, Sravana and Kanya(July-Aug; Aug-Sept; Sept-Oct) are the three months recommended for the performance of Pavitra-festival. To perform it in the month of Ashadha is superior; to perform it in the month of Sravana is of medium type; to perform it in the month of Kanya is of inferior type. Or, in the least, it may be performed in the month of Tula and Kruttika. The Pavitra should be performed on the fourteenth day of the first half of the lunar month. In all other months, it may be performed in both the bright half and the dark half of the lunar month. Either on the fourteenth lunar day or on the eighth lunar day(of the bright half and the dark half) the Pavitra-festival should be performed according to the prescribed directions.

After the performance of the light-festival in the month of Kartika, the Pavitra-festival should never be performed in that year. For the house-holders, the bright half of the lunar month is preferable. For the ascetics, both the bright half and the dark half of the lunar month are suitable. The exact nakshatra for the Pavitra-festival may be fixed so as to be favorable to the birth-star of the Acharya or that of the chief sponsor. Or, such compatibility may not be observed.

The thread to be used for making the pavitra may be made of silk or cotton. If such thread is not available, it may be made of maunja-grass, darbha or bark of sacrificial trees. Having collected sufficient thread, the Guru should observe the ritual of ‘adhivasa’(staying in the temple precincts and being on fast in the previous night). First, the thread should be folded thrice and again the three-folded thread should be made so as to be three-folded. If the thread is to be made from wool, first the collected wool should be sprinkled with pure water and purified with the recital of astra mantra. Then it should be dried with the recital of hrudaya mantra. Having done these, the Guru should make the threads from the consecrated wool.

Vama and other eight Saktis(Nava Sakitis) are the presiding Deities of the nine threads. Starting from 18 threads and increasing the number by 10 each time, the Guru can take 108 threads to make the pavitra. Such kind of pavitra is considered to be the foremost among the superior kind(uttamottama). In a different way, it is held that the pavitra made of 12 threads is of inferior type; made of 24 threads, medium type; and 36 threads, superior type. Alternately, it is also held that the pavitra made of 16 threads is of inferior variety, made of 51 threads, medium variety; and 81 threads, superior variety. Such pavitras should be offered to the Linga installed by a human-devotee.

For the self-manifest Linga(svayambhu) and other Lingas, bana-linga, linga designed with gems, sthandila-linga, mandals, festival icons, installed images – for all these, the number of threads may be in even number or odd number. For the house-holders and the retinue-deities, the threads should be in even number. O, the Lords of the Sages!, even for the lingas worshipped by those who are not so wealthy, the number of threads may be in even number.

Starting from one and increasing by one each time, the knots to be provided in the threads may be up to 12. The number of the knots should be according to the number of the threads and the knots should be smooth, shiny, tight and evenly spaced. Or, the number of knots may be as desired by the Guru. Under all circumstances, the knots should be with equal size. In this Agama, it is held that the measure of the knot may be from one digit to three digits. The knots should be made perfectly by the experts as desired by them according to the situation.

The threads should be smeared with the aromatic paste prepared with red sandal, saffron, ores available in the mountains, agaru-sandal, bulb of blue lilly, camphor, turmeric powder and krishna-gandha, with the recital of hrudaya mantra. With such threads or with red-colored threads, three pavitra should be made. These are of the nature of atma tattva, vidya tatva and siva tattva and these should be placed on the top of the Linga. The fourth pavitra made of such threads, representing all the tattvas, should be placed on the pedestal. Pavitras known as ‘yajna sutra’ and ‘bahu mala’ should be offered to the mukha-linga and even to the fully-formed images(sakala bimbās). For the images whose hands are so long as to touch the knees (indicating the perfect frame of the body) and whose limbs are perfectly exposed, pavitra made of three threads or more than three, as desired by the Guru, should be offered. For the Lingas which are very small, the pavitra whose size may be equal to yantra-linga or pushpa-linga should be offered. Pavitra made as desired by the Guru may be offered to the sthandila-linga.

One pavitra should be offered to the Bull in such a way that it lies between the horns and hoofs, passing over the hump. One pavitra should be offered to each of the retinue Deities installed in the enclosures. For Candesa and Kshetrapala, one pavitra should be offered. Similarly, for the Deities installed in the boundary of the village and for the Directional Deities(Indra and others), one pavitra should be offered to each of them, proceeding in clockwise direction. For the yajna mandapa, the shrine of the Bull and the Deities(Karakas, who execute the orders of the Presiding Deity) installed in the vimana and other parts of the temple, pavitra made of three threads should be wound around each of them. Having planned systematically in this way, the Guru should begin to observe the ‘adhivasa’ rite.

A fitting pavilion(mantapa) should be constructed in front of the front hall(mukha mantapa) or to the right or left of that hall. The pavilion may be with a length of 5 hastas to 24 hastas, provided with 16 or 12 pillars through out and an altar(vedika) associated with all features and lineaments, at its middle. Or, the pavilion, already built, associated with an altar at its middle, having a length of 2 or 3 hastas may be used for the intended rituals. There may be nine or five fire-pits around the altar or one fire-pit in the east of the altar. If not fire-pits, same number of sthandilas may be designed around the altar. Or, there may a sthandila over the altar also.

avisṛjya raviṁ śuddho mantrasannaddha dehayuk 	34

In west side of the fire-pit, the Guru should place the relevant mandala and place the pavitra in its east side. Having done the morning purification, ceremonial bath, sandhya-worship, special tarpana(offering of water and akshata to various Deities), personal daily worship associated with the worship of Sivasurya, the Guru should farewell the Sivasurya, purify himself once again and render his body to be constituted of samhita mantras associated with kala mantras.

Having ceremonially acquired the sacrificial ground, the Guru should worship the entrances of the yaga mantapa, the guardians of the entrances, Vastu Brahma, Lakshmi, Yagesvara invoked in the kalasa, Lokapalas, Ganesa and the seven Gurus. Having entreated for the auspiciousness of the proposed ritual, he should worship Lord Siva present in the mandala also according to the directions set forth in the Agama. Then he should go near the Sivalinga and having squatted himself on his seat, should worship the Linga right from the ideation of Lord's seat up to invoking His immediate presence. He should perform this worship in a special manner with the mixture of five fruits, special snapana, various kinds of perfumes, various kinds of sweets, dishes and foods, cooked rice and such other preparations. Then, he should come back to the pavilion, sit near the fire-pit and perform all the deeds related to the fire-ritual, right from the consecration of the fire-pit up to the offering of the consummate oblation.

He should make oblations with faggots, clarified butter, cooked rice, parched paddy, sesame associated with wheat. The faggots got from the palasa, udumbara, asvattha and vata trees should be offered into the fire-pits of east, south, west and north respectively. The faggots got from sami, khadira, srivruksha and plaksha trees should be offered into the fire-pits of south-east, south-west, north-west and north-east respectively. The faggots of palasa tree should be offered into the main fire-pit. In the main fire-pit, oblations should be offered for 100 or 50 times with the accompaniment of siva-mula-mantra. One tenth of the oblations made with the mula mantra should be done with the recital of anga-mantras, into the main fire-pit. Half of this number of oblations should be offered into the other fire-pits pertaining to Tatpurusha and others, and hrudaya and others. Having cooked the rice for the sake of 'sthali-paka', the havis should be divided into three parts, with the recital of hrudaya mantra.

One part is for Siva; another part is for the fire; and the remaining part is for the self(for the offering priest). The parts belonging to Siva and the fire should be mixed with honey and clarified butter. The part belonging to the priest(atma bhaga) should be mixed with clarified butter alone. Having worshipped the part belonging to Siva with the recital of hrudaya mantra, he should take it to the main shrine and go near the Linga. Having gone there, he should worship the Lord of the Devas well and humbly inform the essential parts of the ensuing observance(vrata).

Seat, umbrella, foot-stool(paduka) and yogic-band(yogapattika) should be placed in the north-east. All the items mentioned above may be placed around and near the pavitras kept on the sthandila. These should be sprinkled over with the recital of astra mantra; offered protection with the recital of kavaca mantra; worshipped with the recital of hrudaya mantra; and rendered to be with the quality of nectar by displaying the dhenu-mudra. Having done all these, the Guru should make known that all these are set right so as to be owned by Siva. Then, he should take hold of the pavitras to be offered to the Lord of the Devas, reciting the brahma mantras.

A sthandila should be designed over the altar, with eight dronas of sali-paddy, four dronas of unhusked rice associated with sesame and parched paddy. The Guru should place a vessel on the sthandila and the pavitras in that vessel. If there is mandala over the altar, then the vessel containing the pavitras may be kept near the kumbha. Having sprinkled the arghya-water over the pavitras, he should take out the pavitras, reciting the samhita mantras. Having covered them with the purified skin of black antelope, he should place them near the fire-pit.

Having contemplated Lord Siva to be in the form and nature of the year, as the witness of all the deeds performed in the course of a year, imperishable, protector of systematic order of the events, the regulator who, considering the way in which various deeds have been carried out, metes out the fruits of those deeds to be experienced by the doers, the Guru should offer the oblations known as ‘sompata-homa’ for 21 times, reciting the mula mantra, brahma mantras and anga mantras. Having offered the ‘gandha pavitra’ to the Sun, he should do ‘acamana’ and offer pavitras designed with five threads to the Deities who are present in the yaga mantapa, bull-mantapa, vimana and the enclosures. Such pavitras should be wound around the Deities.

ādau vā kumbhavardhanyoḥ datvā yāyācchivāntikam 	61

Then, he should offer the gandha pavitra to the retinue Deities - Nandi and others – proceeding in clockwise direction. As done before, he should go inside the shrine and offer the gandha pavitra to Brahma. “O,Lord!, these are the pavitras which have been consecrated well through sacramental rites. Now I am offering these to Lord Siva, who is present in the kumbha. Let these be accepted by Him” – having entreated in this way, he should offer the pavitras to Him for the sake of protecting the purity and divinity of the temple. Or, he may offer the gandha pavitras first to the Kumbha(Siva) and the Vardhani(Sakti). Having offered, he should enter into the main shrine and go near the Linga.

He should wear the gandha pavitra on his own body, and offer the gandha pavitras to the row of seven Gurus. Then holding his hands to be in anjali-mdura(hand gesture indicating obeisance), the Guru should take the ‘amantrana-pavitra’ designed with a minimum number of threads and associated with only one knot, perfumed with aromatic fumes , worshipped with flowers and energized with ‘amruta-mudra’ and simultaneously breathing out and reciting the mula mantra of Siva, he should place it on the top of Sivalinga. In the immediate presence of the Supreme Lord, he should recite the “amantrana mantra”.

“O,the Supreme Lord!, You are Isvara who could render all those activities which have remained unfulfilled and defective by violating the prescribed rules, to be perfect and defectless. In view of this yajna, now I, being the one who has obtained all those needed for this yajna thorough your gracious order, address You and greet You . Being worshipped , You know well the beneficent effects of this yajna. O, the Lord of all beings and of all the worlds and the worldly objects, O, Sambhu!, You are the giver of all in all possible ways and in all times. My salutations to You. Bestow Your grace upon me.” – having recited this amantrana-mantra and dedicated the recital to Him(in his right hand), the Guru should praise Him, prostrate before Him and request His pardon.

Then, he should offer the paviras to the Lokapalas(Directional Deities) and their weapons. Having offered the third part of the ‘caru’(sacrificial food) to Siva who is present in the heart of the fire(of the principal fire-pit), he should offer the ‘amantrana pavitra’ to Him, as done before. “Om Indraya Namah balim gruhana” – this is the mantra to be recited for offering the bali to Indra. Similarly, for all ther Lokapalas, the mantra should be recited, changing the name of the Deity.(Om Agnaye Namah, balim gruhana.... Om Yamaya Namah...)Bali should be offered to all the Lokapalas and the Astras in the due order, in clockwise direction.

Then, having offered the bali to Kshetrapala in the north-west, he should do acamana and offer the oblations for the sake of expiation and finally he should offer the consummate oblation. Then he should do the ‘vyahruti homa’, reciting the words ‘om bhuh, bhuvah, svah..’ separately and then collectively as ‘om bhurbhuvassvah..’. Following this he should do the sampata homa, reciting the mantras: Om agnaye svaha, Om somaya svaha, Om agnishomabhyam svaha, and Om agnaye sivshtakrute svaha.

Then, he should unite the Lord present in the heart of the fire with Siva whose presence is invoked in the mandala, through ‘nadi sandhana’ (joining the fire-pit and the mandala with a string designed with darbha, silken thread or thread made of silver or gold) and meditate on Lord Siva. Then, he should offer the pavitra to the Agama Scriptures and his own Guru.

Having come out of the yaga mantapa and having taken the acamana-water, the Guru should purify himself. Brushing the teeth, taking the sips of pancha gavya and eating the caru – these should be done in this order. Having taken acamana-water once again, he should sleep there, contemplating the greatness of Siva.

76

Then, in the next morning, having done the purificatory activities, ceremonial bath, sandhya-worship and mantra-tarpana, the Guru should enter into the main shrine and take out the pavitras from Siva who has not been farewelled and place them in the vessel kept in the mandala designed in the north-east of the shrine. This should be done for the sake of Candessvara. Then, having offered eight flowers to the Lord, he should farewell Him from the Linga.

Having squatted on his seat being north-faced, he should keep his body straight and assume a convenient posture. Then, having assumed the body energized with mantra-nyasa, he should preapare visesha arghya and purify the paraphernalia. Having rendered his hands to be the hands of Siva through nyasa, he should prepare the pancha gavya. He should worship Lord Siva elaborately in a special manner, making use of special snapana , mixture of five fruits and pancha gavya.

Having done the incantation of mula mantra, the Guru should dedicate it to Lord Siva and come back to the place where fire-pits are designed. Having sprinkled the arghya water over the main fire-pit with the recital of astra mantra, he should worship the Deities invoked in the mekhalas and paridhis. Having consecrated the ladles, sruk and sruva, and the clarified butter, the Guru who is expert in the sacrificial process and rituals should offer the consummate oblation. Then, having invoked the Lord, he should worship Him and make Him pleased and delighted. Then, having offered oblations for the sake of expiation, he should offer the consummate oblation.

Having offered the pavitra to Sun, the Guru should do the acamana and assume the mantra-form. Then he should offer the pavitras to Nandi and other retinue Deities and enter into the shrine. He should then offer the pavitras to Brahma, kumbha and vardhani in the due order. Then, having gone near the Sivalinga, he should squat himself on his seat and perform the special worship in an elaborate way according to the resources collected abundantly. Then having worn a pavitra on his own body, he should offer the pavitra to the row of seven Gurus and contemplating the form of Siva, he should remain there.

Being in the presence of Siva who is in the form of varsha(year), ritu(duration of two months), month, half-month, day, nadi, breathing and other such minute durations, who is the sole cause for all the activities related to all the organs, the body and the objects earned through these, who is the sole witness to all those activities which have been done excessively, which have been omitted, which have been left out unfinished and which have been done in contradictory and disorderly way, who is the protector of the temple-site, who is the controlling Lord, who is the ultimate resort for all and who is all-pervasive, the Guru should entreat. Turnining towards the Lord and holding the pavitra in his hands and being with pure heart, he should make the following request:

“O, Lord!, you are of the nature of Time. Whatever is seen by you in this yajna being done by me, deed which has been done in contradictory way, which has been left out unfulfilled, which has been done as not related to the present activity, which has been done secretly, let it become faultless. Let the abandoned activity become the accomplished; let the defective acitivity become defectless; let the fruitless activity become fruitful. Kindly make all my activities as the perfectly accomplished deeds. O, Sambhu! , you are all and all are you. With your grace and with this pavitra, make the fruits of this observance(vrata) to be abundant and purposeful. You are the controlling Lord of all the vratas.

“makhavrata phalam puraya puraya, niyamesvaraya svaha” – he should recite this mantra at the end.

The sadhaka who wishes for the worldly enjoyments should recite these mantras in the reverse order. Having recited the Sīva mula mantra first, he should recite the mantras beginning with “Om sīva tattvadhīpataye sīvaya namaḥ” and place three pavitras on the head of the Linga. Then he should offer the fourth pavitra known as ‘gāṅgavatara pavitra’ reciting the mantra “Om sarva tattvesvaraya sīvaya namaḥ”.

With his hands held in ‘anjali mudra’ and filled up with flowers, the Guru should entreat the Supreme Lord: “ You are the ultimate resort for all the beings. Such state of being the ultimate resort for all the moving and non-moving existents of the worlds always exists in you. O, the Supreme Isvara!, being the indweller of all the beings and all the objects, you exist as the Seer of all. Apart from you there is no other resort for me, for my deeds, mind and words. Whatever be the deficiency and imperfection committed by me in the recital of mantras, in my rituals, in the materials collected for the worship, let all these deeds be fulfilled and perfected by you. Deficiency committed daily by me in incantation, homa and worship be rectified by you and let all such activities become perfect. Whatever has been left out, whatever defect has been committed in my speech, O, Mahesvara!, let all these become fulfilled and defectless. O, the Lord of all the Devas!, you are the absolute purity. Such purity is capable of destroying the effects of sinful deeds. All these moving and non-moving existents of the world become purified by you. Whatever has been committed by me to be irrelevant due to deficiency in my observances, O, Lord, let all these become relevant and perfect, being strung and unified together with the thread of your gracious order.

The Guru, having done the incantation and dedicated it to the Lord, should praise Him and accept the resolution to observe the vows from the Lord. Then having prostrated before Him with devotion, he should observe the vows for an intended period of 4, 3 or 2 months or one month, 15 days, 7 days, 5 days, 3 days or one day(as instructed by his Guru). He should observe the restrictions related to the vows up to the completion of the vrata(observance). All the restrictions such as limiting his food to only one time a day, should be observed by him according to his capability. Having accepted such vrata from Isvara, he should observe the vows until the pavitra is removed from the Lord.

Having offered the pavitra-thread to the weapons and the Directional Deities, the Guru should offer the fourth pavitra to Siva who is present in the fire kept in fire-pit and offer the oblation with the recital of vyahruti mantras. Having instilled a restraint to the fire, he should perform the 'svishtha kruta' homa. Then, having gone into the shrine, he should worship the Lord and offer the pavitras to his own Guru and to the Agama- manuscripts. Having offered the bali to the Directional Deities, he should do acamana and proceed to perform the fire-ritual for the sake of expiation. Then, he should offer the consummate oblation which is capable of fulfilling all those activities which have become defective and deficient.

Having worshipped the Lord who is present in the mandala, he should request pardon from Him for the defects committed by him unintentionally. Then, he should honor the initiated assisting priests with food, clothes for covering, vessels and tools and say: 'Let Lord Sadasiva be pleased and delighted by my vrata'. Having removed the pavitra from the Linga, he should keep it as nirmalya in the appropriate place. Having bathed the Linga and worshipped it in the next day, he should offer that pavitra to the Linga. He need not remove the pavitra daily. Upon the completion of the vrata, he should worship the Lord as done before, in the past days.

Having completed the vrata and dedicated it to the Lord, he should say: 'Let this vrata be capable of accomplishing the intended fruit for me '. The one who wishes for the worldly enjoyments should say in this way. But, the ascetic who is intent on obtaining the fruit of liberation(vrati) should say: " Let not this vrata become a karmic bond for me; let it lead me to liberation.' Then, having performed the rituals up to mantra tarpana, he should do the expiatory rites. Having offered the vibhuti and worshipped, he should unite the Lord present in the fire with the Lord present in the Sivalinga.

The Guru should draw back the mantras from the fire and leading them up to dvadasanta level(12 digits above the head) he should install them within his heart. Having bid farewell to the Agnideva, he should send off the Deities invoked on the vishtaras. Having offered the bali to the Deities on the paridhis, the Guru should do acamana, purify himself and draw back the mantras from the Sivakumbha and Vardhani kalasa and unite them with Siva present in the Linga.

Having expressed the 'sapeksha visarjana' (bidding farewell associated with an intention; half-farewell, retaining His presence until the consecrated water of the Kumbha is poured over the Linga) to the Lord, he should request pardon from Him. Having bid farewell to the Directional Deities associated with weapons, gaurdians of the entrance, other Deities who are present in the entrance and the Sun, the Guru should take out the pavitras from the Lord and if there is a shrine for Candesa, he should offer those pavitras to him.

If pavitra is not treated as nirmalya and as such other substance, the Guru should do the incantation of aghora mantra for hundred thousand times and offer the oblations for one tenth of that number. In the course of daily worship, the Guru may design the pavitra with flower and other such substances and offer it as the part of daily worship. The daily pavitra may be offered in this way and the yearly pavitra-festival should be conducted every year.

Having ascertained the auspicious nakshatra(lunar mansion) suitable to the occasion, the Acharya should first perform the ‘sprout offering’. Then he should enter the field(dedicated to the temple) with the accompaniment of the blowing of the conch, drum-beating, auspicious rendering of the musical songs and dances, various kinds of flags and canopies, incense and lighted lamps, my devotees, Trident(Astra Rja) and Candesvara(festival icon).

Or, the expert Guru may go to the field without being accompanied by Candesvara. There, he should offer the balis associated with havis and curd to the Bhutas(Deities occupying the field and the surroundings). He should offer such balis in all the eight directions starting from the east, associated with sandal, flowers and other substances. Then, with the recital of kavaca mantra , he should worship the sickle which should be with prescribed lineaments. Having taken the sickle reciting the kavaca mantra and facing the east or north direction, he should reap the ears of paddy, corn and others along with the stalks and having collected all of them, he should place them over the dry and raised ground(sthalika).

Then, he should collect those ears and stalks and proceed towards the village. In addition to the collected ears, fresh grains(husked paddy), rice and other unhusked grains, various kinds of sweet dishes, coconut-fruits, fresh areca-nuts, pepper, pieces of molasses, pieces of sugarcane, various kinds of fresh greens and vegetables, various kinds of spiced and seasoned dishes, varieties of roots kept separately in each vessel, paraphernalia and such other substances which could arouse wonderment – all these should be taken. Being accompanied by the sounding of all kinds of musical instruments, rendering of melodious songs and dances, various kinds of flags and umbrellas, he should enter the village and circumambulating the main streets he should enter into the temple.

Purna kumbha(vessel of fulfillment), lighted lamps designed in various forms, plantain trees, various kinds of auspicious materials – these should be well arranged. Having separated the grains from the husk, the Guru should dry them under the sunlight. Then he should keep them in the vessels made of rattan and such other materials. These vessels should be placed over the plain ground or over the place besmeared with diluted cowdung and beautified with ornamental lines and figures drawn with rice-flour. Lighted lamps should be kept on that ground. Having pounded the grains in the prescribed manner explained under the context of ‘powder-festival’, he should remove the husks, stones and other substances from the grains, collect the unhusked grains and rinse them with pure water .

First he should purify them well, along with pepper, cumin, sugar-candy and coconut fruit. Then he should perform ‘snapana-bath’ to the Lord and adorn the image with ornaments suitable to the occasion. Upon the approach of the auspicious time(muhurta) fixed earlier, he should spread the cleaned paddy grains over the ground. Having spread a cloth over the grains, he should place the plantain leaves over the cloth.

The Guru should sprinkle the arghya water over the rice with the recital of astra mantra, and reciting the Mrutyunjaya mantra (mantra of the Conquerer of the God of Death), he should place the grains on the plantain leaves after drenching them with the water of molasses. Having given protection with the recital of kavaca mantra (avakunthana), he should worship them with the recital of hrudaya mantra. Then, having induced the quality of nectar to them by displaying the ‘dhenu mudra’, he should offer them to the Supreme Lord and offer the water for drinking, reciting the brahma mantras or the tatpuruṣa mantra. Then, he should offer the ‘tambula’ (betel leaf, arecanut and others) to the Lord of the Gods with the recital of those mantras. He should offer these along with freshly plucked arecanuts to Sivasakthi also. The Guru should offer such consecrated fresh grains to all the Deities installed in various shrines (sakala murtis) according to the procedure explained earlier. Or, he may offer them to all the Deities, after placing them over the raised ground.

The Guru should perform the fire-ritual for the sake of the Bull and other retinue Deities, offer the grains and at the end, offer the ‘tambula’ in addition to the offering of the ‘bali’. Then he should distribute the grains to those who have come there as travellers. Or, the Guru may perform the fire-ritual after offering the grains and the tambula. At the end of that, he should conduct the festival. Or, he may conduct the festival without such offering and the fire-ritual.

Such offering of the fresh grains may be performed without the offering of bali to the Kshetrapala or without the activities concerned with the mortar. All other activities are very common as applicable to all occasions. At the end of such offering of the fresh grains, the sponsor should honor the Guru by presenting to him new cloth, gold ring and others and offer the ceremonial fees to him. The one who arranges for such offering of the fresh grains in this way would be blessed with meritorious auspicious state.

Now, I proceed to give instructions for performing the preparatory initiation(diksha) for those who are to observe the religious conducts, first. The Guru, having completed the daily activities of the early morning, offered 'trapana'(water along with unbroken rice) for the mantras and others, performed the worship of the Sun(Sivasurya), attained purity and fitness to do the worship of Siva and having designed his body to be identical with the mantras of Siva, should take the vessel containing the samanya-arghya water and enter the pavilion meant for the yajna.

Having sprinkled the samanya-arghya water over the entrances, he should worship the entrances and the gaurding Deities(Adhipas) of the entrances. Having recited the mantra 'om santikala dvaraya namah' first, he should worship the east entrance. He should worship the vidya kala in the south entrance; nitya kala in the west entrance and pratishtha kala in the north.

In the east, he should worship Nandi and Mahakala, the Gauring Lords of the east entrance; should worship Bhrungi and Vinayaka in the south entrance; Vrushabha and Skanda in the west entrance and Devi(Durga) and Candesvara in the north. Starting with the Pranava(Om) and ending with ‘namah’, each of these names should be pronounced as associated with the fourth case, in the due order. These Deities may be worshipped as present in the arch provided in each entrance , in the vessels(Ghats) or in the encircling wall.

Having approached the west entrance, he should throw some flowers above and having struck the ground three times with his right heel reciting the astra mantra, he should ward off the obstacles present over the ground. The Guru who is an expert in the science of mantras should ward off the obstacles assembled in the space by making the ‘tala’(striking over the left palm with the index, middle and the ring fingers) three times. And, he should ward off the obstacles present in precincts of the temple by snapping the fingers of the right hand three times(chotika mudra).

Having well raised above his right shin and moving close to the left threshold, the Guru should enter inside the shrine. Having tossed a flower over the middle of the upper beam of the entrance with the recital of astra mantra, he should worship ‘Vastu Brahma’ with sandal, flowers and other substances, reciting the mantra ‘om vastoshpataye brahmane namah’. Ideating an enclosure formed of the astra (weapon) and making ‘avakunthana’ (safeguard) with the recital of kavaca mantra, the Guru should ensure the protection of the ‘yaga mantapa’. Being north-faced, he should occupy a fitting seat and perform the purification of his body constituted of the five gross elements.

hṛdābhimantrya pratyekaṁ tilakaṁ candanaṁ nayet 	14

Having rendered his body so as to be identical with the form of Siva (sakalīkarana), the Guru should worship the Lord within his own self and prepare the special-arghya, making use of yava, siddhartha, akshata, water, sesame, tips of darbhas, milk and flowers. He should sprinkle the special-arghya water over his own body and over the collection of various materials meant for the worship, with the recital of astra mantra. Then, he should ensure the protection (avakunthana), reciting the kavaca mantra. Having energized each substance separately with the recital of hrudaya mantra, he should apply a dot of sandal in his forehead.

Having rendered his hands to be identical with the hands of Siva, he should join both the hands and keep them over his head. He should design the sword of knowledge(jnana khadga) with 36 or 32 darbhas whose length should be one span and energize it with the recital of astra mantra. Then he should prepare the mixture of five substances got from the cows. Its procedure is now explained.

In an auspicious portion within the sacrificial pavilion, the Guru should make a square mandala and reticulate it in such a way that nine squares are formed within the mandala. He should place five vessels over the five squares identified with five tattvas. Siva, sadakhya, vidya, kaala and purusha – these are the five tattvas which are to be identified with the squares. Supratishtha, susanta, tejovat, amrutatmaka and ratnodaka – these are names of the five vessels to be placed over these squares. The Guru, who is the knower of mantras, should keep milk, curd, clarified butter, cow-dung and cow-urine in these five vessels respectively in the order mentioned. He should energize these in the same order reciting the isana mantra one time, tatpurusha mantra two times, aghora mantra three times, vamadeva mantra four times and sadyojata mantra five times. Then, he should place darbhas into the vessel containing water and energize the water, reciting the mula mantra six times. Then he should induce the quality of nectar into them by displaying the amruta mudra and mix all of these to form a mixture and make it to be in oneness with Siva.

Having sprinkled the drops of ‘pancha gavya’ over the upper and interior sides of the pavilion, he should collect the seven substances – parched paddy, sandal, white mustard, bhasma, flower, darbha and unbroken rice(akshata) - meant for scattering over the interior of the pavilion, mix them together and energize them with the recital of astra mantra. These substances are to be considered as the weapons which could cut asunder the obstacles. Having seated himself in the south-west of the pavilion, he should perform the essential sacramental rites prescribed for the purification of the pavilion. Being one with Isana-face, he should do these rites such as casting a look charged with the look of Siva and others. The Guru should perform the sacramental rites, which are eighteen in number, even for the fire-pits.

Starting from the north-east, he should throw the seven substances meant for scattering over the interior in all directions. Then he should collect them back with kusa-grass and bunch of darbhas. Then he should place a kumbha (for Siva) on the altar designed inside the pavilion in the north-east or the west, having brought around it from the north-east following the stream of water flowing from the vardhani kalasa. The kumbha may be the one made of gold and such other metals. The kumbha should be filled up with pure water and provided with bunch of tender mango-leaves. It should be with gold coin, and covered with fresh cloth and associated with all other lineaments.

Having collected back the scattered substances which are the weapons, the Guru should arrange them to form the seat of the vardhani kalasa. This seat is to be worshipped as moveable and immoveable seat according to the context. He should invoke the presence of Siva in the kumbha reciting the mantras pertaining to murti and vidya-deha and the mula mantra. The vardhani kalasa should be associated with water, cloth, threads, gold coin and others. It should be considered as the form of Astra. It should be provided with a tube-like protrusion at its base. The vardhani should be kept in such a way that the tube-like protrusion is facing the west.

O, the foremost among the Gurus!, having worshipped Siva in the kumbha and the Astra Sakthi in the vardhani with sandal, flowers and other substances, the Guru should worship the Directional Deities – Indra, Agni, Yama, Nirruti, Varuna, Vayu, Kubera and Isana – from the east to the north-east respectively in clockwise direction. In the right of Isana, Brahma should be worshipped and in the left of Nirruti, Vishnu should be worshipped. He should worship these Deities as invoked in the ghatas or kalasas or in the fire-pits. In the same location, he should worship ten weapons of the Lokapalas (Directional Deities) - vajra, sakthi and others.

“O, Indra!, with all your attention and force, be present in the east up to the completion of this yajna to ward off the obstacles, as ordered by Lord Siva.” In this way, the Guru should inform the inviolable order of Siva to Indra. In the same way and with the same words and changing the name of the Deity, he should inform the inviolable order of Siva to all other Directional Deities. Then, having lifted first the vardhani and letting the water to flow out from it, he should take up the Sivakumbha and come around the pavilion (interior side) and place the Sivakumbha first in its place and the vardhani, next. Having worshipped the immovable seat now, he should worship Siva in the kumbha and the Astra in the vardhani.

Having worshipped murti, vidya-deha and the limbs of the body of Siva, the Guru should worship Siva and His retinue Lords and the weapons present in the five enclosures duly and establish the union of Siva and Sakthi(Astra) by displaying the yoni-mudra. The fist of the right hand represents Uma(Sakthi) and the pedestal of the Linga ; the raised right thumb represents Siva. In view of the attainment of worldly benefits(enjoyments), the Guru should first touch the kumbha(Siva) with the tip of the right thumb and then touch the vardhani with the fist, reciting the hrudaya mantra. In view of the attainment of final liberation, he should first touch the vardhani with the fist and touch the kumbha with the tip of right thumb, at the end.

“O, Uma!, you appear in the form of bhaga(female genital organ); O, Lord Sankara!, you appear in the form of linga(male genital organ). Salutations to both of You” – having praised in this way , he should delight them and obtain their approval: “ You are the Lord of this yajna. This form is indeed your own unassailable form. This is the sword of knowledge, your own weapon. Kindly take hold of this weapon. During this yajna which is your own sacrificial performance and undertaken by me, this yajna remains to be wholly protected by You only until it gets finished.” Having entrusted the protection of the yajna with the Lord in this way, the Guru should place the arghya vessel there and offer the arghya water to Him. For the sake of averting His departure from the place, he should keep that arghya vessel there itself.

The Guru should conceive firmly that the yajna-pavilion has been completely divested of all kinds of obstacles by coming around with the flowing of water from the vardhani, scattering of the seven substances which are of the nature of weapons and the reciting of the astra mantra and then ideate that the sacrificial ground has been taken possession of ceremoniously. Then he should worship Lord Siva as present in the mandala, sthandila or Linga. He should worship Siva as present in the fire kindled in the principal fire-pit, with the accompaniment of special offerings and rituals.

“O, Lord(Bhagavan), with your abounding grace, kindly enter into my form and bestow your grace upon these disciples who have become competent enough to be blessed through diksha.” – Having entreated in this way, he should think of that Lord is giving permission by saying “I do so”. Having obtained permission from Lord Siva, the Guru should take a white and auspicious turban(head-band) and purify and energize it by reciting the mula mantra seven times, place it on the head of the disciple and conceive his oneness with Siva.

“Lord Siva is seated in the mandala as the sole witness of all the deeds performed by all the beings; He is present in the siva-kumbha as the sole authority for the protection of the yajna; He who is known as Sadasiva is present in the fire(kindled in the fire-pit) as the sole authority for performing the fire-rituals and for offering the oblations; He is present in the body of the disciple as the Lord of Deliverance, undoing the binding factors(three bonds) which are constricting the essential nature of that disciple; He is present in my own body as the bestower of grace. In this way, Lord Siva is present as the performer of five functions related to diksha. Such Sadasiva is indeed myself(sohameva sadasivah).” Having conceived in this way, the Guru should think of his inseparable identity with Siva and contemplate that he has become endowed with the same attributes as those of Siva. “All of my instruments such as the heart and others are indeed the instruments of Siva Himself; there is no doubt about this.” – Having conceived perfect and absolute Lordship in this way, he should entreat Lord Siva in the following manner:

“O, Lord!, for which reason this yajna has been commenced by me is indeed your own yajna. In order to be fully benefited, these disciples whose bonds are yet to be severed are standing at the entrance, awaiting your permission. They have been well examined through their unfailing diligence, sense of non-violation and such other qualities. Their minds have shaken off all the desires born of ignorance. Having known through your brilliant rays and having been urged and kindled by you for a very long time, these disciples have come here. They have fulfilled all the essential duties of the morning such as taking bath and others and have completed the daily duties. They are attired in white dress and are wearing the white upper garment. They are desirous of seeing your lotus-like feet. Bestow your grace upon me to allow them to enter into the pavilion. O, Sankara!, now I am letting them enter into the pavilion to come near your lotus-like feet. O, the auspicious Lord, kindly utter the words “Do as you wish”, permitting me to enable them enter into the pavilion.” Having well conceived that the same words have been spoken by the Lord, the Guru should ask those disciples to enter into the sacrificial hall.

Then he should make them stand on the mandala designed with kusa-grass and identified with pranava(Om). They should stand outside the entrance, but facing the entrance. The Guru should stand facing the north and with his eyes fully charged with the impeccable knowledge of the tattvas, he should look at the whole body of the disciple from his crest up to the tip of the nails of the feet and then from the tip of the feet-nails up to his crest.

“This soul(disciple) , being the one who has severed the fettering bonds, has become fit enough to attain the exalted qualities of Siva(sivatva). The host of bonds which has hitherto been keeping this soul under its sway has now come under my control so that the Sakthi of the Lord could directly enter into this soul. The ‘sparsa vedhi’(philosopher`s stone) is capable of changing the copper, which has become impure by the verdigris, into pure and bright gold. I have been enlightened and enabled by Siva to function like the celebrated ‘sparsa vedhi’. Having made this disciple to become pure and effulgent by my touch, I will instantly make him shine forth like a pure gold. I will make him to be endowed with all the essential qualities of Siva and elevate him to the exalted state of being a crest-jewel of the saintly persons”.

Having contemplated in this way, the Guru should sprinkle the consecrated water with darbhas over the disciple and gently strike his head with bhasma. Moving the tip of the darbhas from the heart down to the feet and moving the bottom of the darbhas from the heart up to the crest, he should scrap out the host of bonds which is intent on impelling the soul towards worldly pursuits. Having performed ‘sakalikarana’(making the body to be identical with the form of Siva) to that disciple, he should cover his eyes with a strap of cloth. Having sprinkled the water with the recital of astra mantra, given protection with the recital of kavaca mantra and worshipped him with recital of the mula mantra, he should cover his eyes with a white band of cloth and leading him into the sacrificial hall, he should make him throw a flower on the mandala and enable him see the form of Siva depicted in the mandala.

On the right side of the siva mandala, he should design a new mandala as before and make the disciple stand on that, with his body kept straight and raised. Then he should purify him through the process of dharana(yoga discipline) and other techniques and render his body to be identical with the form of Siva. Having perfumed his own right palm with sandal paste and such other substances, he should touch his body with his right hand and make it to be occupied with Siva along with his seat and his form.

Having contemplated his right hand to be the hand of Siva, the Guru should move over his hand from the heart of the disciple to the level of the eyebrows or to the level of the crest. For those who are desirous of worldly pleasures, he should move over his hand from the heart to the level of eyebrows. For those who are desirous of liberation and who are without worldly desires, he should move over his hand from the heart to the crest. Having untied the knots formed in the path of sushmna and made them ineffective, he should recite the ‘prasada mantra’ and place his ‘siva hasta’ on the head of the disciple. Such utterance of the prasada mantra and the placing of siva hasta on the head would enable the disciple attain the position of Rudresvara.

Especially, the Guru should touch and see all parts of the body of the disciple. Then he should place a flower scented by sandal, incense and others in the hands of the disciple held in anjali mudra(cavity formed by folding and joining the palms) and entreat Siva uttering the words “om namas sarvatmakaya”. For every disciple he should do these separately. Then, having removed the white band covering the eyes from the disciple, he should immediately direct him to see the lotus-like faces of Lord Siva, Isana and others, and ask the disciple to drop the flower so as to fall on the form or the limbs of Siva, being turned towards Siva.

The flower dropped by the disciple is , in reality, a lotus flower of well expressed devotion to Siva, containing the mass of pollen within it. The face or limb of the form of Siva indicated by the dropped flower should be taken as the name of the initiated disciple and the word ‘sivam’ should be added at the end of that name. This is the name applicable to the disciples belonging to the brahmin caste. The words ‘deva’, ‘kantha’ and ‘gana’ should be added as suffix for the disciples belonging to the kshatriya, vaisya and sudra community, respectively. For the ladies, the word ‘sakthi’ should be added at the end. Or, for all the disciples belonging to all castes, the name ‘siva’ may be added at the end.

Having instructed the process of doing the circumambulation and the prostration involving the eight limbs, the Guru should lead him to the fire-pit and make him sit in his right side on the mantric seat designed with prvanava(Om). Then he should give a darbha to the disciple and ask him to hold the bottom of that darbha. The Guru should keep the tip of that darbha under his shin and contemplate the joining of his own self and the soul of the disciple. Having brought out the central channel(sushumna nadi) which is between ida and pingala from the disciple through his inbreath, he should contemplate: 'let the sushumna of the disciple be merged with my own sushumna', reciting the mula mantra. Then, the Guru should offer three oblations for the sake of stabilizing the joining of his sushumna and the sushumna of the disciple and bringing out the full effect such union.

For drawing the soul of the disciple into his own soul and heart through inbreath and re-installing the soul in the body of the disciple through outbreath, the Guru should offer the oblations for 108 times with the recital of the mula mantra and offer the oblations with the recital of anga mantras for one tenth of the number of oblations done with the recital of mula mantra. Then he should offer the consummate oblation with the recital of siva mula mantra. For the sake of expiation, he should once again offer the oblations for 108 times with the recital of sivamantra. Even those who belong to brahmin and other castes are considered on par with the sudras, as far as their qualities and modes of life are concerned. The Guru should relieve them from the affiliation with the caste and uplift them. Having uplifted from the state of being the sudras, the Guru should offer three oblations and then entreat the Lord: “O, Lord Bhagavan! Paramesvara!, from the body which originated from the union of female and male genital organ and vitiated with many defects owing to the food system, attitudes and worldly perseverences, let this soul come out, become pure, assume a pure body and thereby become a twice-born.”

samānīya dhṛveṇaiva sampūjya śiśumastakāt 	85

For the sake of bringing about the attainment of the position of Rudra, he should offer three oblations in this way. “O, Bhagavan!, with your abounding grace, let this soul become Rudra” – having entreated in this way, he should sprinkle the consecrated water over the disciple(with astra mantra) and gently strike him with bhasma. Then the Guru should enter into the body of the disciple through his outbreath and separate his soul from the body and take it out with the recital of astra mantra. Displaying the ‘ankusa mudra’(hand gesture looking like a goad), he should draw and lead the separated soul up to the plane of dvadasnata and instantly worship it well.

Displaying the ‘samhara mudra’, he should take out the soul of the disciple from the plane of dvadasanta and lead it into his own heart through his inbreath. Then, being in the kumbhaka state, he should contemplate the oneness of his own self and the soul of the disciple. Through his outbreath, he should lead the soul upwards, crossing the planes pertaining to Vishnu, Isvara and Sadasiva and reach the plane of dvadasnata and unite it with Siva. Then, displaying the ‘samhara mudra’, the Guru should reinstall the soul in the body of the disciple, through his outbreath.

The Guru should give the sacrificial thread purified and energized with the recital of the mula mantra to the disciple and make him wear it. Having offered the oblations for 1000 or 100 times with the recital of mula mantra, he should offer the consummate oblation with the same mula mantra. The disciple who has been given the preparatory initiation(samaya diksha) in this way becomes qualified to perform the personal worship of Siva, to render assistance for the performance of fire ritual; becomes competent for the systematic study of the Scriptures; becomes qualified for listening to the recital of mantras. O, the Sages!, such disciple attains the position of Rudra.

Then the initiated person, who has become now a twice-born, gains authoritative state to be blessed with nirvana diksha(the initiation of final liberation). If a Guru performs samaya and visesha dikshas to the sudras , following the process prescribed for the brahmins, even such Guru attains the state of being a sudra because of such performance of diksha. There is no doubt about this.

Now I will give the directions for cooking the sacrificial food in a ‘sthali’(vessel) with regard to the preparation of ‘naivedya’(food-offering) and ‘caru’(cooked rice meant for oblations). Having taken the vessel(sthali) made of copper or earth and associated with specific lineaments, the Guru should sprinkle the consecrated water crosswise(kshalana) with the recital of astra mantra and give protection with the recital of kavaca mantra, cast a look charged with the knowledge of tattvas and mantras over it, sprinkle the consecrated water with the right palm turned upwards(prokshana) and with the right palm turned downwards(abhyukshana), strike three times over it and anoint it with perfumed paste. He should wind a rope made of silk around its neck, with the recital of kavaca mantra which is in the form of a shielding weapon.

On the mandala designed with cow-dung and sprinkled over with the water taken from the astra-kalasa, the Guru should place a darbha charged with the essential mantra. Then he should worship the sixfold seat (shadutthasana, seat comprising ananta, dharma, jnana, vairagya, aisvarya and padma) on the darbha and place the sthali-vessel whose form is of the nature of sivamurti, on the darbha-seat.

Having invoked the presence of Siva along with His retinue Lords inside the vessel, the Guru should worship Him and request Him to depart from the vessel. Having taken out the flowers offered to Siva from the vessel, he should anoint the vessel with clarified butter and pour the milk filtered with a cloth into the vessel. Then he should draw lines over the 'culli' (fireplace made of earth, provided with three projections to support the vessel) with the recital of astra mantra and sprinkle the consecrated water over it with astra mantra and give protection with the recital of kavaca mantra. Then he should worship it, anoint it with diluted cow-dung and worship dharma and adharma represented by the right arm(projected structure) and left arm of the fireplace respectively. He should invoke the presence of sivagni on the middle projection. Having provided a seat of pranava(Om) inside the fireplace, he should mount the vessel over it.

For the preparation of caru, the Guru should take two measures(prasthas) of adhaka-grain or five handfuls. The rice got from the sali kind of paddy and other grains should be in four handfuls. Having washed the grains with the recital of astra mantra and gathered them with the recital of same mantra, he should cook them, being north-faced and reciting the aghora mantra. When the cooking comes to a perfect stage, being neither over cooked or not cooked up to the right level, he should perform 'tapta abhighara' (letting the drops of ghee, for heating) and 'sita abhighara' (letting the drops of ghee, for cooling).

First, he should offer the oblations into the siva-fire with recital of samhita mantras, reciting each mantra as ending with 'sva' and at the end of the offering of havis, he should pronounce 'ha' and utter the words "susvinno bhava". This is known as 'tapta abhighara'. Then, he should design the second mandala and do the sprinkling and other rituals and worship it. He should dismount the vessel from the fireplace and place it on the mandala uttering the words "susitalo bhava" joining the word 'vaushat' at the end. This is known as 'sita abhighara'. This is performed with the recital of samhita mantras.

Having anointed the sthali-vessel with clay and water, the Guru should instill the quality of nectar into the cooked rice by displaying the ‘ dhenu mudra’. He should place it on the first mandala designed and worshipped on the west side of the main fire-pit and worship the sthali, reciting the hrudaya mantra and worship it separately with each anga mantra in the due order. As done before, he should offer the oblations for 108 times, with the recital of siva mantra, the oblation being in the mode of ‘sampata’. It is emphasized in the Agamas that the homa should be done with the caru which has been consecrated with ‘sampata’ in this way.

śeṣahīne carorhome sa homassyādaniṣṭadaḥ	18

The Guru should cook the caru making use of rice and water, daily. The caru should be divided into four parts and one part should be kept for the activities related to homa. The remaining part of the havis after the performance of homa should be given to the Acharya, with all care and efforts. The Acharya should belong to one of the five gocaras and he should have studied and known all the Agamas. If the remnant of the havis is given to other person, certainly the homa-ritual would become ineffective. If no remnant of the havis is left out at the end of homa, then such homa-ritual would not yield the desired benefits.

Caru which is less than one part out of four parts of the havis may be used for the homa-related activities. Among the four parts, the first part is for the Main Deity. The second part is for the homa-related activities. The third part is for the retinue Deities. The fourth part is for the Acharya. If the caru is prepared separately for each Deity, all carus should be first offered as ‘naivedya’ to Siva.

The ‘prana-agni-hotra’ should be performed without fail by the sadhakas who are desirous of obtaining various benefits. If these rituals are performed in a different way, all such rituals would yield different benefits; the benefits would not be as desired by the sadhakas.

Now, I will reveal to you the contents of the chapter dealing with the effects of various dreams. O, the foremost among the twice-born sages!, normally a disciple could have supremely auspicious visions in dreams, during the night prior to the performance of initiation(diksha) or any other special ritual opted by a devotee. If such dream occurs in the first quarter of the night, the disciple would reap its benefit during its own course of time within one year. If it occurs in the second quarter of the night, the effect of the dream would materialize within six months. If it occurs in the third quarter of the night, the effect of the dream would be seen within one month. If the dream occurs in the fourth quarter of the night, its effect would manifest immediately. There is no doubt about such occurrence of the effects of the dreams.

Sun, moon, fire, ocean, sky, earth, mountain, crossing the mountain-stream, ocean or forest-river – vision of these in the dream is declared to be auspicious. Milking the buffaloes or cows, presence of lioness, female-elephant, presence of relatives in one's own house – vision of these in the dream and of these animals giving birth to the calves is considered to be indicative of the immediate attainment of wealth and greatness. O, the supreme sages!, drinking the streams of milk right from the udder of a cow whose color is whitish-red, sportively like its calf, consuming of curd, half-cooked meat, ordures, milk boiled with sugar and pulses – vision of such incidents in the dream is praised for its goodness.

A boy seizing a snake, elephant – if a person sees these in his dream, he would attain a state of well-being. Grass-covered field, large quantity of grains, house associated with fire-ritual – if these are seen in his dream, he would attain prosperity and wealth. A field associated with water, enemies being captured by his troops, enemies being tortured and killed by them, gaining victory in debate, gambling and such other events, gaining victory in the battle – if such events are seen in the dream, he would attain wealth. Moon entering into the earth, clean sky, the dead man eating the food and taking hold of the fire, being honored with the presentation of insignia of the king- if such events are seen in his dream, he would attain happiness. The stringed musical instruments(such as vina)being played well, jumping over such stringed instruments, hearing the harsh sounds of crying – such dreams would lead to auspiciousness.

If a person sees in his dream a body which is in the likeness of a golden structure being crushed and scattered, then he would attain wealth and abundance of varieties of grains and he would have the fortune of being adorned with all kinds of ornaments. A person who sees in his dream that he is making his livelihood by maintaining a retail shop should know that his wealth will be augmenting more and more and that the duration of his life would be increased. If a person sees in his dream wheel, vessel of fulfillment(purna kumbha), srivatsa or svastika and if he sees that he is drinking the blissful soma-juice, then he would attain all those desired by him.

Hearing the words such as ‘Sivagama’ and others in the dream would lead to the attainment of richness. To see in his dream the arrival of Guru or a much enlightened scholar in his house would yield a state of well-being and auspiciousness. Seeing a scorpion, conversing with the celestial ladies, brahmin ladies and the ladies belonging to the celestial group known as the ‘Maruts’ would yield auspicious benefits. It is said that seeing the ‘tambula’, collyrium, leaves of bilva-tree, saffron powder, mandala-design and doing the works such as constructing a wall, cow-shed and others, raising a flower garden – would yield auspicious benefits.

Himself being thickly covered by smoke and fire, his head being cut off, himself being tied up or obstructed by others – if such visions occur in the dream, he would be subjected to fearful effects. If a person sees in his dream that he is drinking rice-gruel or arrack, then such dream would lead to decay of his wealth and fortunes. Rice, well-cooked meat, chaff, burning charcoals, green gram, black gram, pepper, mustard – if these are seen in the dream, such dream would yield inauspicious effects.

Seeing in the dream a red object turning into a black object is inauspicious. Seeing in the dream a black substance coming out from red substance, lotus, palasa tree and red sandal, seeing in the dream a washerman, drawing artist, messenger, foreigner or heretical persons would not lead to auspicious effects. Seeing an ant-hill, dried and emaciated tree, poisonous tree, crying of various beings, sudden falling of the trees – is not for favorable effects. If a person sees in his dream that a deity, a brahmin, ancestor, yogi or king is revealing some messages to him, whatever has been told by them would materialize actually.

Such dreams would manifest, indicating auspicious or inauspicious effects, according to the mature state of one's own karmic fruits. These dreams are viewed as the indicating factors. They are never manifesting as born of the defects of essential future events. The nature of essential future events which seem defiled by another such events, becomes modified and it is this modified event that is seen by a person in his dream, as if it is perceived or happening actually. If a person continuously think of a seen or heard object and with the same concentrated thinking if he goes to sleep, the same object manifests as actually perceivable.

With regard to the knowledge of these two kinds of dreams – auspicious and inauspicious, no malicious purpose is intended or aimed at in this Agama. In view of the knowledge of the events or objects lying beyond the actual perception of the eyes, events or objects appear in the dream as perceivable actually, involving some anomalies. The auspicious and the inauspicious dreams seen by a person are equally based on the essential phases of the future events of his life. Its nature of being based equally on the good and bad events of the future is not affected by the actual occurrences. This is specifically true.

O, the twice-born sages!, the disciple should inform the details of his dream to the Acharya, whether the dream is auspicious or inauspicious. The state of pre-eminence is determined based on the order of castes such as brahmin and others, age, wealth, austere conducts, orderly behaviour, over-all knowledge and such other qualities. First, the most eminent disciple should inform his dream to the Acharya. All other disciples should inform their dreams to the Acharya, in the order of eminence. Or, this kind of pre-eminence may be observed among them through the guidance and direction of the Acharya.

A brahmin for whom samaya-diksha has been performed and a sudra for whom visesha-diksha has been performed- between these two, only he who has been ordered and authorized to have the next higher diksha should approach the Guru. If equal state of initiation is noticeable among many disciples, only the disciple who is directed by the Acharya should prostrate before the foremost Guru. If equality is observed among many disciples with regard to caste and sacraments, only that disciple who has been authorized and instructed by the Acharya should approach the initiating Guru.

With regard to the mutual salutation(prostration), the same order should be maintained. Even if there is pre-eminence among them in view of the sacraments and others, mutual honoring such as prostration and other deeds need not be done, if such instruction comes from the initiating Guru. Under all circumstances, only the instructions and directions of the initiating Guru should be given importance.

The austere conducts of the disciples of one and the same Guru have been explained here. What is use of speaking elaborately? Whatever has been instructed by the Guru, only that should be fulfilled always by the disciples who are desirous of most excellent merits and upliftment.

kṛtabrahmārcanaḥ kṣetrarakṣāṁ kṛtvā vidhānataḥ 	3

Now I explain the procedure of performing the initiation called ‘nirvana diksha’ which is efficacious in yielding the final liberation. Having performed all the daily rituals, offered ‘tarpana’ for the mantras and others, completed the sun-worship, the Acharya should purify himself and render his body to be identical with the form of Siva by means of ‘sakali karana’. Holding the samanya-arghya (arghya water meant for common purpose) in his hand, he should perform the worship for the entrance (of the sacrificial pavilion) and the for the Deities who are guarding the entrances. Having entered into the sacrificial pavilion through the western entrance, he should perform the worship of Vastu-Brahma, ward off the obstacles and ensure the protection of the pavilion according to the scriptural directions.

kumbhaṁ ca vardhanīm tatra saṁpūjya parito guruḥl
lokapālānathābhyarcya teṣāṁājñāṁ tu śrāvayetl	6

Having performed the purification of his body and soul and done the essential ‘nyasas’ with the accompaniment of appropriate mantras, the Acharya who has well known the significance and details of the rituals, should prepare the ‘viśeṣa arghya’, design the knowledge-sword(jnana khadga) and prepare the mixture of five substances got from the cow(pancha gavya). Having consecrated the substances meant for scattering over the interior ground and purified the interior area, he should scatter those substances around the altar with kusa-grass and collect them back and place the collected things in the north-east of the pavilion. Having worshipped the ‘siva kumbha’ and the ‘vardhani(astra) kumbha’, he should worship the directional Deities who are present in their respective directions and make them hear the order given by Lord Siva.

anugrahastvayā kāryaḥ śiṣyāṇāṁ bhāvitātmanām	8
iti vijñāpya labdhājñāścoṣṇīṣaṁ śirasi nyasetl

He should take the ‘siva-kumbha’ and the ‘astra-kumbha’(vardhani) in his hands and circumambulate the interior. Then, having worshipped the knowledge-sword and Siva in the mandala, he should offer tarpana in the fire-pit for the mantras. “O, Bhagavan!, being gracious and kind towards me, kindly enter into my body for bestowing your grace upon this disciple whose soul is in perfect state in all respects.” Having entreated in this way, he should mentally conceive that he has been permitted to perform the initiation and he should place the head-band(turban) on the head of the disciple.

mamāpi te tathaiveha svātantryaṁ svasya cātmani
sambhāvyādhyeṣayeddevaṁ prāṇairantarbahissthitaḥ	12

Lord Sadasiva who is present in the mandala exists as the sole witness for all the deeds performed by the souls; He is present in the kumbha, as the sole protector of this yajna; He is present in the fire as the inspirer and performance of the fire-ritual; He is present in the disciple for the removal of the constricting bonds; He is present in my body as the One who disentangles the disciple from the bonds. O, Lord Sadasiva!, you are the sole authority for all these five deeds and I am one with Sadasiva.” Having conceived in this way, the Guru should think of his inseparable identity with Siva and contemplate that he has become endowed with the same attributes as those of Siva. “The mantras of Lord Siva, hrudaya and others, which are the causal sources of all other mantras are indeed present in my hrudaya and other parts in the same way as they are with the Lord. Absolute lordship of Isvara is assumed by me by the grace of Siva.” Having contemplated such a total identity with Siva through the vital airs which are functioning in and out of the body, he should entreat the Lord once again:

“This disciple has been examined well in all possible ways; he has become competent enough. For the sake of obtaining the ‘nirvana diksha’, he is beside me. He belongs to the superior class and to superior division. He is strongly established in all the observances prescribed for such attainment. Grace should be bestowed upon him by me for delivering him from the bonds. Being firmly and absolutely resolved to attain liberation, he has become more and more highly qualified through the guided study of the Sivagamas.” Having informed his competency in this way, he should guide the disciple to enter into the sacrificial pavilion and make him seated in his right side, in front of the fire-pit. Having completed the ceremonial entry of the disciple in this way, the Acharya who has known well the rituals related to ‘nadi sandhana’ (unifying the nadis of the Guru and the disciple), should perform the oblations meant for mantra tarpana along with the ‘purna ahuti’. Then he should offer the oblations for the sake of ‘dipana’ (making the mantras to be resplendent and vibrant) of the siva manta and other mantras.

Reciting the siva mantra and the anga-mantras, adding the aghora-bija in the first and the last and ‘vaushat’ at the end and displaying the expressions of anger such as keeping the eye-brows crooked and keeping the face with a frightening look, he should offer three oblations. This is the procedure for the mantra-dipana. Then, he should take the thread spun by virgins and make it to be threefolded first and once again threefolded . He should sprinkle the arghya-water with the recital of astra mantra, give protection with the recital of kavaca mantra and worship it with the recital of mula mantra. He should tie up that thread on the tuft of the disciple who is keeping body well raised and straight. The thread should be made to be hanging up to the front of the toe of his right leg.

Having contemplated the thread to be in the form of ‘sushumna nadi’, the Guru should draw out the sushumna nadi from the body of the disciple reciting the mantra ‘om suhumnaayai namah’ and unite it with the thread. Having worshipped the thread with sandal, flowers and other substances, he should ensure its protection with the recital of kavaca mantra. Then , for the sake of unified existence of the sushuna in the thread he should offer three oblations into the fir-pit with the recital of the mula mantra.

Having sprinkled over the heart(middle of the chest) of the disciple with the recital of astra mantra and struck over it with a flower, reciting the astra mantra, the Guru should should enter into the disciple through his outbreath(and through the disciple`s inbreath), reciting the mantra ‘hum’. Reciting the astra mantra, he should unlock and cut asunder the knot of the heart and draw out his conscious-soul which is in the form of a star, reciting the mula mantra(atma mula mantra) and enter the plane of dvadasanta and place that soul keeping it between the seed-letters ‘ham’and ‘ham’.

Reciting the seed-letter ‘ham’ and displaying the samhara mudra, the Guru should unite the soul with the thread and give protection to it with the recital of kavaca mantra(avakunthana). Then he should offer three oblations into the fire-pit for the sake of ‘sannidhana’(stabilizing the unified existence of the soul with the thread), reciting the mula mantra. Subsequent to this, he should unite mala, karma and maya which yield ‘bhoktrva’(experiencing state), enjoyments and body respectively to the soul and then santyatita and other kalas with the thread, reciting the mantra pertaining to each of these. “om haum santyatita kalayai hum phat”- this is the mantra to be recited for the santyatita kala to be united with the thread.(Similarly for ther kalas).

Having struck over the head of the disciple with the recital of astra mantra and with a flower, he should draw the soul through samhara mudra, and reciting the mantra ‘om haum santaytita kalayai namah’, he should unite the santyatita kala with the thread, looking the thread from the brama randhra down to the middle of the eye-brows. In the same order, as explained under the context of purification of the gross and subtle body, he should unite all other four kalas with the thread, repeating tadana(striking), grahana(drawing out) and yojana(uniting) for each kala, looking the thread down to the neck (heart), navel, knee and toe. The Guru who is well-skilled in performing the initiation should contemplate the state of pervading(vyapaka) and that of pervaded(vyapya) existing between the kalas.

Mantras are pervaded by padas; padas are pervaded by varnas; varnas are pervaded by bhuvanas; bhuvanas are pervaded by tattvas and tattvas are pervaded by kalas ; karma, mala and maya are those which pervade mantra and others. In another aspect, mala, karma and maya are the pervaded; five kalas are those which pervade them. So, if the pervasive kalas are taken for purification, all other categories which are pervaded by the kalas remain there eventually for purification. The kalas function in two ways: as set in action and as kept in pure state, being free from any action. When the kalas are set in action, all others which are pervaded by them, such as mantras, tattvas and so on, also set in action. When the kalas are kept in pure state, all others which remain pervaded by the kalas also remain in pure state, without binding the soul. So, in this supreme initiation, the purification of the kalas is essentially needed.

The ‘dipana’ of these kalas should be done reciting the mantra which begins with ‘om’ and ends with ‘vaushat’. First, the seed-letter of aghora(hum), then the seed-letter ‘haum’, then ‘santyatita kalayai’, then, ‘hum phat’ (om hum haum santyatita kalayai hum phat). This is for santyatita kala. For all other kalas, except the seed letter belonging to each kala, all other words are to be retained as they are. Having offered three oblations into the fire, the Guru should control the binding power of the bonds.

prṭhakprṭhak samuccārya sūtre granthiṁ samācareṭ

Reciting the astra mantra(and displaying the naraca mudra) , the Guru should strike on the head of the disciple and reciting the ‘siva mantra’ in three modes, he should entreat: “ O,Bhagavan!, this kala called santyatita is associated with mala, karma and maya and is pervading santi and other kalas. Arrest firmly the binding power of this kala. Arrest, hum phat.” (om hraum haum hraum santyatita kala pasamalakarma maayaasaakta tattva bhuvanaadi vyapakam bandha bandha hum phat). Recitng this mantra, he should make a knot on the thread at the crest level of the head. Similarly, he should recite the mantra for all other four kals, placing the seed-letter of Siva between ‘hraum’ and ‘hraum’, changing the seed letter pertaining to each kala, stating its pervasion over mala and others, reciting the words ‘bandha bandha’ and ‘hum phat’ and make a knot on the thread at the middle point of the eye-brows, at the neck, at the navel and at the knee.

pañcagavyaṃ caruṃ tebhyaḥ pradadyāddantadhāvanam

Having taken up the thread from the disciple, the Guru should place it in a hollowed plate made of earth (sarava) and close it by another such vessel. He should perform the ‘sarpata homa’ and offer the thread (kept in the vessel) to the Lord presiding over the mandala and place it beneath the siva kumbha to be protected by the Lord present in the kumbha. Having directed the disciple to prostrate before Siva present in the siva kumbha, the Acharya should come out of the sacrificial pavilion along with the disciple. Then, he should give ‘pancha gavya’, ‘caru’ and the stick meant for brushing the teeth to the disciples.

In a pure place located within the enclosure, kept separated and smeared with cow-dung, mandala should be designed separately for each disciple. In view of the motivation towards liberation and enjoyable wordly life, the disciples who are intent on enjoyable worldly life should be directed to sit, facing the east and the disciples who are intent on attaining liberation should be directed to sit, being north-faced. With their legs and hands washed well, the disciples should sit on the mandala , keeping their knees bent up close to their body taking efforts to maintain the order in occupying the seat. They should be holding kusa-grass in their right hand. The Acharya, raising his right hand wearing the pavitra-ring, should give a handful of panchagavya to each disciple with the recital of hrudaya mantra.

After the disciple has drunk the panchagavya, the Acharya should give another handful of panchagavya to the disciple and give the same for the third time. Then, he should give the caru-food to each disciple. Eight mouthfuls of caru should be given. For the disciples intent on liberation, the caru-balls should be given in a plate made of asvattha-leaves. For the disciples intent on worldly life, the caru-balls should be given in a plate made of pippala-leaves.

The disciples should swallow the caru-balls, taking care to see that the caru does not touch the teeth. After the swallowing of caru, the Acharya should give a tooth-stick got from the auspicious trees which have milky sap, to each disciple. The tooth-sticks should be with a thickness of little-finger, straight, containing sap and without scars or bubble-like protrusions. For the disciples who are motivated to the attainment of liberation, the length of the tooth-stick should be eight angulas and for the disciples who are intent on enjoyable wordly life, the length of the tooth-stick should be twelve angulas. They should brush well the tip of the front teeth, pressing the rows together and removing the chewed bits left out in the rows, and brighten the teeth. After the tooth-wash has been finished, the disciple should throw away the tooth-stick. Observing the direction in which the thrown out stick falls down, the Guru should know the auspiciousness or inauspiciousness of the forthcoming event.

Falling of the tooth-stick in the south-east, south and south-west is not indicative of auspiciousness. Falling of the stick just in front of the face, and in directions not mentioned before is indicative of auspiciousness tuned to the fruit of his karmas. Having noticed the direction in which the tooth-stick has fallen, the Guru should direct the disciples assembled there to take acamana-water. He should make them sleep there in that night, after giving them protection(with astra mantra), in order to know the auspiciousness or inauspiciousness through their dreams. They should sleep on the ground which has been smeared with diluted cow-dung with the recital of sadyojata mantra and purified with suitable substances. The disciples oriented towards wordly life should keep their head in the east, while sleeping. The mukti-oriented disciples should keep their head in the south. They should sleep in the bed strewn with kusa-grass and vibhuti. The beds should be arranged in such a way that they are not touching each other. Pillows should be kept on the two sides of the bed. The beds should be guarded by four sticks or ropes placed around with the recital of astra mantra. The place where the beds are arranged should not be in darkness.

The Acharya should direct the disciples to lie on the bed protected by the astra-weapon through the incantation of astra mantra for 100 times. The tuft of each disciple should be tied up with the recital of sikha mantra. Having covered the disciple with a cloth consecrated by the recital of kavaca mantra, the Acharya should draw three lines around and outside the bed with sesame, mustard and vibhuti consecrated by the incantation of astra mantra. Then he should instruct the mantras and prayer related to the the Deity of Dream to the disciples awaiting the visions of dreams and direct them to go to sleep. Then, he should offer ‘bali’ to the Directional Deities present in the ten directions, in the due order. Having known the unfavorable or inauspicious effects indicated by the falling of the tooth-stick and caru, the Acharya should enkindle the fire which has become dormant so as to be bright and blazing and offer oblations into the fire 100 times for the sake of appeasement. In view of the nature of the dreams, he should offer 100 oblations for each kind of appeasement.

After offering the oblations for appeasement, he should offer the oblations for 108 times with the accompaniment of the mula matra of Siva. Then, having washed his feet and hands, he should take acamana-water and take a bath with pure water. If not with water, he may take the bath with bhasma, by besmearing the vibhuti over his body with the accompaniment of relevant mantras. Having wiped his body with white cloth, he should render his body to be identical with the form of Siva and meditate on Lord Siva whose form is constituted of six adhvās. Then he should take pancha gavya and caru and brush his teeth with the tooth-stick as done by the disciples earlier. Having purified himself, he himself should sleep there.

Then, in the morning of the second day, the Guru should complete all the daily activities to be performed in the morning and ask the disciples to inform what they have seen in their dream last night. If the dreams indicate inauspicious effects, the Guru should perform the appeasing rites. He should offer the oblations of milk got from the tawny colored cows, clarified butter, durva-grass and honey for the sake of appeasement. If the dreams are indicative of auspiciousness, the entering of the disciples into the sacrificial pavilion and other routine rituals should be performed as done before.

Having directed the disciples to assemble there inside the sacrificial hall, the Guru should instruct them to be near the fire-pit, standing by his right side. Having hung the thread kept in the hollowed plate made of earth from the tuft of each disciple, he should entreat Lord Siva: “ O,Deva!, now I am proceeding to bestow my grace in the form of diksha upon this disciple. I humbly inform this to you.” Having obtained the kind permission from the Lord, the Guru should invoke and install the Adhara Sakti in the fire blazing forth in the fire-pit.

Out of 81 words (which constitute pada-adhva), 28 words starting from 'OM' in the reverse order are associated with nivrutti kala. These are: Om, namo namah, om sivaya namah, om namo namah, sarvada, sarva, sukska sukshma, sabda sabda, jnana jnana, pinga pinga, patanga patanga, turu turu, sakshin sakshin, purvasthita purvasthita, asamstuta asamstuta, anarcita anarcita, brahma-vishnu-rudrapara, sarva sannidhyakara, sarvabhuta sukhaprada, bhavodbhava, bhava bhava, sarva sarva, prathama prathama, muncha muncha, yogadhipataye, mahatejah, sadbhavesvara and mahadeva. The Guru should contemplate that the pruthvi tattva, varna and others mentioned above are pervaded by the adhva related to nivrutti kala.

Reciting the mantra “om hlam nivrutti kalayai hah hum phat”, the Guru should take out the nivrutti kala from the thread, install it in the fire and offer three oblations with the recital of the mantra “om hlam nivrutti kalayai svaha”. Then, contemplating on mala, karma and maya which are causing the state of enjoying(bhoktrutva), enjoyments(bhoga) and bodies(sarira) to the souls respectively, he should conceive that innumerable embodiments are assumed in the womb of the Sakti and Vagisvari is pervading such embodiment, invoke and install this Vagisvari in the fire and worship Her.

He should worship Vagisvari, reciting the mantra “om vagisvaryai namah” and offer three oblations, reciting the mantra “om vagisvaryai svaha”. “O, Devi, Isvari!, be present here with your gracious form in the the rituals related to the ‘diksha-grace’ are being performed for the disciple.” – having entreated in this way, he should sprinkle the consecrated arghya-water over the disciple with the recital of astra mantra and strike at his heart , reciting the mantra “ om hah hum phat”. Through his outbreath and through the inbreath of the disciple, he should enter into the body of the disciple and cut asunder the knot at the heart, separate the conscious soul displaying the ankusa-mudra and recting the atma mantra ‘om haam ham haam atmane namah’ and offer three oblations.

ādāya tasmāccaitanyaṁ mudrayodbhava saṁjñayā
sarvāsu yoniṣu śiśoḥ saṁyogaṁ yugapannayet 	100

Having conceived the conscious-soul of the disciple to be in the form of a drop at the tip of a grass-blade, the Guru should draw out the soul from the disciple with the recital of the atma mantra ‘om haam ham haam atmane namah’ and displaying the samhara-mudra and bring it into his heart through his inbreath. Having retained his breath(kumbhaka), he should recite the atma mantra, raise it to his dvadsanta plane and unite it with Siva. Then having taken it out from the plane of dvadasanta by displaying the udbhava mudra, he should contemplate the simulataneous conjoining of the disciple with the wombs of all beings.

niṣpatyai sarvagarbhāṇāṁ dadyānmulāhutitrayaṁ 	102

To actualize such simultaneous conjoining, he should offer three oblations, reciting the mula mantra ending with 'svaha'. "O, Bhagvan!, Lord of all Gods!, do the conjoining of the disciple with all the wombs in this activity of diksha which is capable of yielding the final liberation." Having entreated in this way and obtained His permission, the Guru should offer three oblations for the sake of taking birth in all the wombs, with the recital of mula mantra. O, the twice-born Sages!, he should pray to the Lord while offering the oblations in this way: "O, Bhagavan!, do the actual formation of embryo within all the wombs for this disciple, here in this diksha."

Then, he should offer three oblations with the recital of mula mantra for the sake of simultaneous birth of the disciple from all the wombs. "O, Bhagavan!, enable the birth of this disciple from all the wombs." – he should pray thus, for the incidence of birth of the disciple . Then he should offer three oblations with the recital of mula mantra for the sake of full growth of the born disciple and pray to the Lord: "O, Bhagavan!, enable the full growth of the body of this disciple." Then, he should offer three oblations with the recital of mula mantra for the sake of acquiring the karmas pertaining to those births and pray to the Lord: "O, Bhagavan!, enable this disciple to earn the karmic effects which yield various kinds of enjoyments." Having recited the mantra for the sake of earning of the karmas, he should recite the mantra for the resolving of the effects of virtuous worldly deeds: " O, Bhagavan, enable the acquiring of the meritorious effects of the karmas which are yet remaining(sancita) and which are earned afresh(agamika)."

Contemplating the karmas done according to the locations and time, done with body and wordly objects, which remain differentiated as sancita and agamika and contemplating various kinds of enjoyments and which are of the nature of instilling the feeling of pleasure and pain and which exist in the soul in the form of motivation towards enjoyment(bhoktrutva), the Guru should offer three oblations with the recital of mula mantra and entreat: “O, Bhagavan!, bring out the manifestation of enjoyments for this soul.” Contemplating the dissolved state of propensity which is present in the form of intensified fondness towards enjoyments, he should offer three oblations with the recital of siva mula mantra and pray: “O, Bhagavan!, bring out the dissolved state of the propensity in the form of intensified fondness for this soul involved in the performance of diksha.” Then, for the sake of purification of the working and maturation of the karmas which mete out caste, longevity and enjoyments to the souls, he should contemplate the collective power(nishkruti) of the soul to perform all the deeds pertaining to all births and should offer 100 oblations with the recital of hrudaya mantra and three oblations with the recital of mula mantra.

“O, Bhagavan!, perform the the purification of all kinds of karmas for this soul in view of the collective power of the soul to do all the deeds.” Having entreated in this way, the Guru should contemplate on the removal of the bondage of maya. Since no enjoyment is left out now, the Guru should contemplate that the soul is coming out of the entanglement of the bondage of maya and should offer three oblations with the recital of mula mantra. Then, he should proceed to disentangle the soul from the bondage of mala. Contemplating on the motivation towards enjoyment(bhoktrtva) rooted in the soul because of anava mala, he should offer ten oblations with the recital of hrudaya mantra and three oblations with the recital of mula mantra for the sake of purification of bhoktrtva. This is the process of severing the bondage of mala. Subsequently, the removal of the bondage of karma is now told.

Removal of the bondage of karma here means effecting the absolute non-existence of the karmic effects in the soul. Contemplating on the absolute non-existence of the karmic effects, the Guru should offer three oblations with the recital of mula mantra and entreat the Lord: “O, Bhagavan!, bring out the removal of the bondage which is of the nature of mala, karma and maya for this soul which is involved in the sacramental activities related to nirvana-diksha.” Then, for the purification of the bondage of nivrutti kala which is pervading over mala and other factors, the Guru should offer three oblations with the recital of mula mantra and entreat the Lord: “O, Bhagavan!, perform here the separation of nivrutti kala from this soul.” Having obtained order and direction from the Lord, the Guru should contemplate: “The soul has now been dissociated from all kinds of bonds upon the dissolution of all kinds of embodiment and it is now existing in its own state of singleness(ekatvam).” Contemplating in this way, he should offer the consummate oblation(purna ahuti) with the recital of siva mula mantra ending with ‘vaushat’. Then he should invoke the presence of Brahma reciting the mantra “om brahmaṇe namaḥ”, worship Him and perform ‘tarpana’ for Him.” “ sabdasparsau grahanatra brahman svaha” – (Brahman!, take back the sound and touch , svaha)reciting this mantra, he should offer three oblations and inform the order of Lord Siva to Him.

“O, Brahman!, you are the one who maintains nivṛtti kala. This soul has now reached a pure world free from any defilement. Let no impediment be caused by you. This is the order coming from the Supreme Lord” Having informed this, he should bid farewell to Barhma and contemplate the soul to be at the lower plane of suddha tattva, being disentangled from the nivṛtti kala and having the brilliance of pure crystal. Having contemplated in this way, he should offer three oblations with the recital of mula mantra and entreat: “O, Bhagavan!, perform the deliverance of this soul from the bondage caused by nivṛtti kala.” Then, he should draw out the conscious-soul of the disciple which is placed within himself through his inbreath and by displaying the saṁhara mudra and unite it with the thread with the recital of kavaca mantra. He should offer three oblations with the recital of siva- mula mantra for the sake of existence of that soul. Reciting the mantra “om vagisvaryai namah”, the Guru should worship Her and perform ‘tarpana’ for Her. In order to send back Vagisvari, he should offer three oblations into the fire.

Then the Guru should look at the stretch of the thread (between knee and the navel) for the sake of purification of pratishtha kala. In this pratishtha kala , there are 23 tattvas. They are: jala, tejas, marut, akasa, gandha, rasa, rupa, sparsa, sabda, upastha, payu, pada, pani, vak, nasa, jihva, cakshu, tvak, sruti, manas, ahankara, buddhi and prakruti.

The afore mentioned 23 tattvas, 24 varnas, 3 mantras, 21 padas and the 56 worlds remain compactly arranged and stored and pervaded by the pratishtha kala. Having conceived the pratishtha kala in this way, the Guru should contemplate the series of births and enjoyments related to the pratishtha kala(as done for nivrutti kala), and the purified and the dissociated state of the prathishtha kala. Having recited the relevant words of mantras and prayers in the same way as done for the nivrutti kala in the process of purification, the Guru should contemplatively look at the purified state of the pratishtha kala. O, the twice-born sages in the lineage related to Siva!, the mantra for effecting the total union of the two kalas – nivrutti and pratishtha – is now instructed. “om hlaam hviim nivrutti pratishthaabhyaam namah”. He should offer three oblations with the recital of mula mantra. All other activities such as invoking, worship and others should be in the same way as done before for the nivrutti kala. The oblation for the sake of ‘nishkruti’(collective power of performing all the deeds) should be done by the Guru with the recital of sikha mantra. Having given the ‘rasa’ as gift-money to Vishnu, the Guru should proceed further and reach the vidya kala.

Tattvas from prusha (to maya) are pervaded by the vidya kala. Purusha, raga, vidya, kala, niyati, kaala and mohini(maya) – these seven tattvas are in the vidya kala. Seven letters from ña to gha in the reverse order of the alphabet and the sikha mantra are in this vidya kala. There are 27 worlds in this kala.

Six worlds from Vama are in the purusha tattva; Five worlds from Prachanda are in the raga tattva. Krodhesa and Samvarta are in the vidya tattva. Jyotish and Pinga are in the kala tattva. Sura and Panchantaka are in the niyati tattva. Ekavira and Sikheda are in the kaala tattva. Eight worlds from Mahadyuti are in the maya tattva.

In this vidya kala, there are 20 padas(of vyoma vyapi mantra, reckoned in the reverse order). They are: vyapin vyapin, vyomin vyomin, acetana acetana, paramesvarapara, jyotirupaya, sarva vidhyadhipaya, sarva yogadhikrutaya, anidhanaya, goptre, guhyatiguhyaya, namo namah, sadyojata murtaye, vama deva guhyaya, aghora hrudayaya, tatpurusha vaktraya, isana murdhaya, sivaya, sarva prabhava, namassivaya and dhyana haraya. Having joined the pratishtha kala with vidya kala, the Guru should install the vidya kala in Adharasakti invoked in the fire.

Having offered 100 oblations with the recital of sikha mantra for the sake of ‘nishkruti’, the Guru should submit ‘rupa’ and ‘gandha’ as gift-money to Rudra (who is in His abode in the path of adhva), reciting the mantra ‘ bhagavan rudra rupagandhau grahana’’. The state reached now includes in itself all the three kalas –nivrutti, pratishtha and vidya and it is called Bhava. The soul has to be raised above this state so as to be above the plane of atma tattva comprising 31 tattvas. The soul stationed at this level exists being seized by ‘adhikara mala’(being intent on wielding the authority over the impure worlds), having attained great sources of enjoyments produced there. These sources of enjoyments are helpful to the further upliftment of the soul, unmixed and not restrained by the attitude of intentness. The Guru should enable the soul to experience these bhogas, enjoyment of which is accomplished by the organs and instruments compatible to the pure adhva. Having mentally conceived the soul to be at this higher plane, he should contemplate the santi kala and all those which are contained in it.

O, the foremost among the twice-born sages!, there are three tattvas in this santi kala – suddha vidya, isvara and sadhakhya. Three letters – ga, kha and ka are there. The mantras pervaded by the santi kala are tatpurusha vaktra and kavaca mantra. Vama, Jyeshtha, Raudri, Kaali, Kalavikarani, Balavikarini, Balapramathani, Sarvabhutadamani and Manonmani – these nine worlds are in the suddha vidya tattva. Ananta, Sukshma, Sivottama, Ekanetra, Ekarudra, Trimurti, Srikantha and Sikhandi – these eight worlds are in the isvara tattva. Sadakhya – this one world is in the sadakhya tattva. On the whole, there are eighteen worlds in the santi kala.

For the sake of ‘nishkruti’, the guru should offer 100 oblations with the recital of kavaca mantra. All other rituals and mantras are the same as told before for the previous kalas. Buddhi and ahankara should be submitted as gift-money to Isavra who is the Chief Maintainer of the Santi kala. All other activities which are to be performed after this, should be done in the same way as done before.

The only one tattva in the santyatita kala is siva tattva. Varnas in this kala are the sixteen vowels from ah to a. Astra mantra, isana mantra and siva mantra – these three mantras are here. Only one pada, ‘om’ is in the santyatita kala. There are 15 worlds here. Nivrutti, Pratishtha, Vidya, Santi and Santyatita are the five worlds related to the bindu . Indhika, Dipika, Rocika, Mocika, Urdhvagamini – these are the five worlds evolved from the nada. Vyapini, Vyomarupa, Ananta, Anatha and Anasrita – these are the five worlds related to sakti tattva.

Having known that the santyatita kala is the one in which siva tattva, 16 varnas, 3 mantras, 1pada and 15 worlds are compactly stored, the Guru should perform the joining of the two kalas – santi and santyatita- with the recital of the mantras pertaining to the pure plane . The mantra to be recited for joining the kalas is: ‘om hyaim haum santi santyatitabhyaam namah’. Having wroshipped well with attentive mind, he should offer three oblations. All the activities such as the kala-upasthapana should be peformed in the same way as done before. For the sake of ‘nishkruti’, he should offer 100 oblations with the recital of siva mantra. Then he should offer the oblations with the recital of the prescribed mantras , keeping the seed-letter ‘hrum’ and leaving out the seed-letter of the astra mantra.

Then, in the performance of ‘nirbija diksha’(initiation not involving the recital of seed-letters), the Guru should do the following at the end of the offering of the consummate oblation(puranahuti). He should unite ‘samaya’(preliminary initiation) and ‘samaya acara’(conducts related to the preliminary initiation) with ‘tirodhana sakti’ which is of the nature of bond and pray: O, Mahesvara!, perform the purification of the bondage related to ‘samaya’ and ‘samya acara’ to this disciple.” Then he should offer the ‘sulka’ (gift-money) in the form of ‘manas’ to Sadasiva, reciting the mantra, “ om ham sadasiva mano grahana svaha”. Then he should offer three oblations with the recital of mula mantra. Having requested Sadasiva to retire to his place, he should take out the thread free from defilements. Taking out the soul of the disciple from his own body through his outbreath, he should re-istall it within the body of the disiple through the inbreath(of the disciple).

Having sprinkled a few drops of arghya water over the head of the disciple, he should worship Vagisvari invoked in the fire and offer tarpanas for Her. Then he should entreat: O, Devi! you have become fatigued for the sake of this disciple. Kindly retire to your own place.” Then he should contemplate the dissolution of santyatita kala into the sakti tattva. The foremost Guru should conceive the presence of atma tattva as extending up to the upper limit of maya and worship it reciting the mantra ‘om ham atma tattvaya namah’. For propitiating the defects which could have occurred in applying the prescribed rules, he should offer the oblations for 100 times, reciting audibly the siva mula mantra ending with ‘svaha’. Then he should conceive the presence of vidya tattva as extending up to the upper limit of its own realm and offer the oblations for 108 times, reciting the mantra in low tone. The defects occurred in the recital of the mantras get nullified by the recital of siva mula mantra. Then he should conceive the presence of siva tattva as extending up to the sakti tattva(siva tattva includes here all the five tattvas of the pure adhva) and offer the oblations for 108 times, reciting the mantra mentally (inaudibly). The defects occurred in the mind and thought get nullified through the incantation of siva mula mantra. Then, the Guru should proceed to cut the tuft of the disciple.

Having meditated on the tuft as within the fold of adhva, as pervading over all the adhvas and as the source of the adhvas and having conceived the conscious-soul of the disciple as present on the tip of the tuft with the brilliance of pure crystal, the Guru should take the scissors with the recital of sikha mantra. Then he should cut out the tuft with the recital of sikha mantra and bathe the disciple. Having sipped the acamana-water and completed 'sakali karana' (rendering the body to be identical with Siva), the Guru should wrap up the severed tuft with cow-dung, place it on the tip of the 'sruk' (ladle) and offer it as oblation into the fire. Then he should offer the consummate oblation (purna ahuti). Then having come out of the sacrificial hall, he should purify the sruk, sruva and the scissors by sprinkling the consecrated arghya-water over them. Then, having done the acamana once again and having worshipped the Lord, he should supplicate:

For this, your kind permission may kindly be accorded to me.” Contemplating the Lord saying “ You do as you wish”, the highly eminent Guru should take the arghya-vessel in his hand and call the disciple to come near him and reach the fire-pit along with the disciple. Having sprinkled over the disciple, he should direct him to do ‘sakali karana’, ‘antar yaga’, ‘nadi sandhana’ and mantra tarpana.

He should offer one oblation , reciting each of the mantras with which sakali karana was performed. Having done the purification of sakali karana, he should unite the disciple with Siva. At this stage, the place for the Acharya is suddha vidya tattva; seat for the Acharya is the one designed with the kalas of bindu. Indhika ,dipika, rocika, mocika, urdhvagamini, sukshma, sukshmamruta – these are known as the bidu-saktis.

O, the twice-born sages!, nivrutti, pratishtha, vidya, santi and santyatita are known as the nada-saktis. The foremost and eminent Acharya, being seated on the seat designed with bindu kalas, should render his body as designed with these bindu-saktis and nada-saktis.

With such a kala-designed body, the Guru becomes associated with vyapini, vyomarupa, ananta, anatha, and anasrita which serve as external organs; becomes associated with samana, atma tattva, unmana and sarva which serve as the internal instruments. Thus, his body becomes perfectly filled up with such potential Saktis. He should do puraka(inbreath) and kumbha(retention of breath) and keep his tongue in such a way that it is closely pressing the palate. Keeping his mouth slightly opened, keeping the rows of his teeth without touching each other and keeping his body well raised, the Guru should unite the disciple with his own self and contemplate the oneness of the sushumna of his disciple with his own sushumna, through the movement of the vital air.

Having well contemplated the consciousness of the disciple to be with the brilliance of a pure crystal along with the mantra pertaining to it, the Guru should steadily recite the 'prasada mantra' of Siva through the yoga-process of 'kaarana tyaga'(leaving out Brahma, Vishnu, Rudra and others in their respective planes contained in the sushumna) and unite the disciple with Siva shining forth in dvadasnata. He should do this maintaining inbreath(puraka) and retention (kumbha). With his mind, vital air, kalas pertaining to the nada-sakti duly restrained, he should place the sruk and sruva near by his side, take back the soul which is pure and bright comparable to the flame of fire displaying the samhara mudra from the fire and unite it with the body of the disciple with the recital of the seed-letter of astra, as done before. Upon such unification, this disciple is rendered to be with matchless qualities.

He becomes pervasive up to the plane of higher tattvas reached by him through the upliftment done by the Guru. He becomes a well-accomplished powerful person like a prince who has attained the whole kingdom after he has been anointed as the successor of the king. In a person who has not known the significance of six peerless qualities of Siva, such qualities do not shine forth even after a lapse of 100 years. For the sake of manifestation of six peerless qualities in the disciple, the Guru who is an expert and well-learned should offer six oblations into the fire, taking clarified butter in the sruva. He should employ these mantras for such oblations: ‘om hrum haam atman sarvajno bhava svaha’, ‘om hrum him atman paritrupto bhava svaha’, ‘om hrum hum atman anadibodho bhava svaha’, ‘om hrum haim atmansvatantro bhava svaha’, ‘om hrum haum atman aluptasaktir bhava svaha’, ‘om hrum hah atman anantasaktir bhava svaha’. These should be recited preceded by the recital of prasada mantra in shortened mode.

Thus, the significance of nirvana diksha which is efficacious in warding off the effects of all the negative deeds has been told to you. Those who belong to all the four castes, those who are born in mixed caste, those who have born in righteous way, those whose birth could not be identified with any caste – all of these are eligible for attaining nirvana diksha. Son-in-law, father, wife and such others who are desirous of attaining the final liberation are eligible for attaining this nirvana diksha. The Acharya who performs nirvana diksha is, indeed, Siva Himself. So, for a disciple who is blessed with nirvana diksha, there does not prevail the quality of being a son to the Guru(He becomes a sadhaka). For those who have born in the lowest caste, diksha related to fire-ritual should not be performed. But they are eligible for ‘cakshushi’ diksha(initiation performed through the concentrated and highly charged looks of the Guru).

The eminent Acharya should perform the jnana-diksha for the competent disciples through the perfect instruction on the essence of knowledge-section of the Agamas. He should do this in an auspicious bright-side of a lunar month, in an auspicious day and nakshatra and in an auspicious duration(muhurta), giving attention to all specific rituals. Especially, he should perform this jnana-diksha, during the last phase of midnight. This jnana-diksha should be done in a solitary place, in a place not frequented by the people.

Siva-temple, residence of the Guru, sakthi-pitha, monastery, house, sacred place frequented by the saints – these are the places suitable for the performance of jnana-diksha. The Acharya may select any one of such auspicious places. The disciple born in the lineage related to five ‘gocaras’ should stay in his Guru’s residence, contemplating the attainment of the essence of knowledge-section of the Agamas. He may sit on a seat designed with darbha-grass or tiger-skin or on a seat made of wood based on the vastu mandala consisting of 36 square grids(small squares).

The disciple should honor his Guru seated on the yoga-pitha , offering all kinds of services such as bathing and others. He should adorn him with silken cloth and ornaments. Having worshipped him with sandal, flowers and such other substances, he should offer ‘payasa’(milk boiled with green gram and sugar), sweet cakes and tambula(betel leaf and areca nut) to him. Then he should worship the feet of the Guru, with the accompaniment of sixteen kinds of honoring.

The most eminent Acharya should perform jnana-diksha giving attention to specific aspects of this kind of diksha. The disciple should spontaneously come forward to surrender his body, wealth and prana to such a great Guru. Without showing any sign of shyness, he should prostrate before the Guru, casting himself down on the floor like a fallen long staff. To such a competent disciple, the Acharya should give instructions on the essence of the knowledge-section(jnana pada).

The Guru should place his right palm holding the fragrant flowers on the head of the disciple. Then the compassionate Guru should place his feet, which were worshipped before, on the head of the disciple. After this, he should instruct the eternal principles which are to be essentially contemplated and which enable the sadhaka to be in a state of total absorption, to that disciple. The eternal principles are:

प्रथमं तत्त्वरूपं च द्वितीयं तत्त्वदर्शनम्॥	१०
तृतीयं तत्त्वशुद्धिश्च चतुर्थं चात्मलक्षणम्।
पञ्चमं चात्मसंदर्शं षष्ठं स्यादात्मशोधनम्॥	११
सप्तमं शिवरूपाख्यं अष्टमं शिवदर्शनम्।
नवमं शिवयोगं च दशमं शिवभोगकम्॥	१२

prathamam tattvarūpaṁ ca dvitīyaṁ tattvadarśanam 	10
tṛtīyaṁ tattvasuddhiśca caturtham cātmalakṣaṇam
pañcamam cātmasaṁdarśaṁ ṣaṣṭhaṁ syādātmasodhanam 	11
saptamam śivarūpākhyam aṣṭamam śivadarśanam
navamam śivayogaṁ ca daśamam śivabhogakam 	12

Tattvarupa(nature and function of the tattvas) is the first; tattva darsana(knowing the dependent state of tattvas) is the second; tattva suddhi(to be dissociated from the tattvas) is the third; atma lakshana(the state of the self in which it takes cognizance of Pati, pasu and pasa)is the fourth; atma darsana(cognizance of the exact nature of the self) is the fifth; atma suddhi(being immersed in the grace of the Lord) is the sixth; siva rupa(being motivated towards the attainment of Sivajnana) is the seventh; siva darsana(the state in which Siva reveals Himself to the self) is the eighth; siva yoga (the state in which the self transcends the triple state, triputi, knower, known and the knowledge)is the ninth; siva bhoga(the state in which Siva grants the ineffable bliss to the self, by showing the exact path to the self and himself seeing that path) is the tenth.

त्रिभिर्देवैश्चतुष्केण पतिपाशपशुत्रयम्।
गुरोर्वचनमात्रेण जीवन्मुक्तिप्रकाशकम्॥	१३
इत्यर्थदशकं ज्ञानमर्गेणास्य विधीयते॥	१४

tritribhedaiścatusṣkeṇa patipāśapaśutrayam
gurorvacanamātreṇa jīvanmuktiprakāśakam 	13
ityarthadaśakam jñānamargeṇāsya vidhīyate 	14

The impeccable knowledge of the three realities Pati, pasu and pasa is woven in these ten eternal principles which remain grouped in three sets. The first three constitute one set; the next three constitute the second set; the last four constitute the third set. By mere instruction of such principles done by the Guru, the state of jivan mukti (being in a liberated state, even while living as an embodied being) gets fully unfolded with all its effulgence. Continued contemplation on these ten eternal principles is essentially prescribed for those who are following the jnana marga (sanmarga).

Now I am giving the directions for the ablution of a sadhaka (who has been given the ‘nirvana diksha’) to empower him to assume the position of Acharya. Only by such ablution, one becomes the fully qualified and authoritative Guru (Acharya). Such Acharya is the native of Aryavarta-land. He is endowed with the richness of wisdom and spiritual disciplines and is associated with all kinds of etiquette.

The extensive land in which the brahmins, good and disciplined persons who are observing the ennobling conducts, mendicants, good people who are doing penance are living and where the gods and celestial beings are present and where the Vedas are being followed is considered to be Aryavarta. But, within this extensive land of afore mentioned qualities, the eight territories whose names begin with the letter ‘ka’ and which are in the area lying between the Vidhya mountains and the ocean are not to be considered as belonging to the Aryavarta. By the way, the names of these eight territories are mentioned now: Karnata, Kalinga, Kacca, Kahsmira, Konkana, Karahata, Kukkuta and Kanka.

Those who are born in the lineage of Adisaivas are considered to be highly qualified and competent priests for the performance of installation, consecration and such other activities. All those who are born in the four castes, brahmin and others, are also competent to do such activities of installation and others for their own personal shrines. In performing the diksha for the people of all castes, installation, abhisheka(ceremonial bath), expounding the import of the scriptutres and such other activities, the Adisaiva is considered to be the foremost Guru. O, the twice-born Sages!, he is the most qualified one in both the personal and public worship and in the performance of the worship of all Deities.

The common brahmins are competent to perform the initiation(diksha) and installation(sthapanā) for the people of three castes –brahmins, kshatriyas and vaisyas. Kshatriyas are competent to do these for the kshatriyas, the vaishyas and the sudras. Vaishyas are competent to do these for the vaishyas and the sudras. These should be performed for the personal worship alone. The sudras are competent to perform the diksha and sthapana for their own caste, that too for the purpose of worshipping the moveable image (cala linga) only. A mendicant, devoted to constant contemplation, is competent for performing these for the worship of the bana-linga or the momentary-linga(kshanika-linga) .

Let the devotees discard a person who appoints a different priest, leaving out the Adisaiva-priest who has followed the instructions set forth the jnana-section, yoga section, kriya-section and the carya-section of the Kamika and the other Agamas known as the Saiva Siddhanta sastras which were revealed by Lord Siva Himself and in which well-established principles have been declared. A person who invites a different priest leaving out the Adisaiva who is always involved in the deep contemplation of the truths set forth in the Agamas is a man invested with stupidity. One should not move with such a foolish person.

The foremost Acharya should perform the ‘acharya abhisheka’ to the competent sadhaka endowed with qualifying characteristics mentioned before, in an auspicious day and auspicious ‘lagna’. Such abhisheka should be preceded by the offering of fresh sprouts. A pavilion should be erected in the east, north-east or north, having its main entrance in the north. It should be provided with a well-designed covering roof and charming canopies. Two altars should be designed inside the pavilion, each one having a height of half-hasta and having four equal sides whose length should be four hastas. One should be in the south and the other, in the north. The pavilion should be beautified with savstika-design on all the four sides and should be illumined with the lighted lamps. Having performed the ritual known as ‘bhu parigraha’ (taking possession of the selected ground), the Acharya should worship Siva invoked in the fire kindled in the fire-pit.

If the disciple has been initiated by another Guru and if it seems that he has failed to perform some of the rituals which are to be essentially done after initiation, the present Guru should set right his defects by performing the diksha centered on the purification of six adhvas and offer the exterior and the interior ‘balis’. Then he should do the rituals prescribed below. He should prepare a mixture of gruel, cooked rice, earth, bhasma, durva-grass, cowdung, pieces of molasses, white mustard, curd and pure water. Then he should arrange in due order nine or five pots(kalasa) over the spread of all the recommended grains. These kalasas should be provided with bunch of darbhas and a fitting lid, should be wound around with thread, filled up with water and deposited with perfumes, gems, gold coins, leaves of mango, asvattha and palasa trees and with the pomegranate fruit. In the case nine kalasas, Sadasiva and eight Vudyesvaras are to be worshipped in them. In the case of five kalasas, the presiding Lords of the five kalas – nivrutti and others – should be worshiped. With the relevant mantras of these Lords, the kalasas should be energized.

As described under the section dealing with ‘snapana’, one hundred kalasas may be arranged and worshipped with the recital of siva-mula-mantra or only one kalasa may be placed and worshipped with the same mantra of Siva. Such kalasas should arranged over the south altar. He should direct the disciple to be seated near the north altar. Contemplating Lord Siva surrounded by His retinue Lords is present on the seat in the same way as He is seated on the bhadra-pedestal, he should worship Him with all kinds of offerings.

Having cleaned the ‘saravas’(hollowed earth plate) differentiated in various colors with a wet cloth or with water, the Guru should bathe the disciple well and should lead him to another pure place. Then he should give him new cloth, well-made sacred thread and others along with the upper garment and garlands. Having directed the disciple to besmear himself with white sandal paste and apply the bahsma over his body, he should make him sit on the bhadra-pedestal near the south altar. Being east-faced, he should worship him with sandal, flowers and other substances and perform all other rituals related to the honouring and perform the light-offering(aratrika) by waving the rounded plate at whose center the well-designed wicks are lighted and glowing brightly.

The Guru should state: “Having known well the exact process of giving initiation and the fruits of initiation, exact procedure of the rituals prescribed for the initiated disciples, process of installation and consecration and such other activities related to all these, from today onwards you shall perform all these activities, diksha and others, after thoroughly examining the disciples and the contexts. To this effect, now I am conferring the full authority upon you.” In the same way, he should entreat Lord Siva and his own Guru: “Let the authority conferred by me upon this disciple be fulfilled without any obstacles and interruptions through your grace.” Then, the Guru should lead him to the fire-pit and offer the oblations to each one of the five kalas -nivrutti and others – separately.

The oblations should be offered with the recital of the mantra pertaining to each kala. At the end, he should offer the consummate oblation. Then, the Guru should make a mark on his fingers, from the little finger to the thumb, with the burnt tips of the darbhas, reciting the five brahma-mantras. Having made the hands of the disciple to be identical with the hands of Siva according to the prescribed procedure, the Guru should bestow his authority upon his disciple. For the sake of such bestowal and to regain his own authoritative power, the Guru should offer the oblations for atonement according to the rules. Having worshipped Lord Siva with brahma-mantras , anga-mantras and the mula-mantra, he should offer ten oblations with the recital of anga-mantras and ten oblations reciting the mula-mantra of Siva. Having offered the consummate oblation with the recital of same mantra, he should entreat the Lord to pardon him for any defect or violation that could have occurred while performing these rituals. In this way, he should bathe his disciple. In addition to this, he may bathe him with the kalasas energized with the sadhya-mantras (mantras, specifically selected for the accomplishment of certain goals, considering the nature of the disciple).

The disciple who has been duly initiated by a Guru is called ‘putraka’(son). The one who has been purified by common sacraments is called ‘samayi’. The disciple who is known as ‘samanya samayi’ is characterized as ‘Maahesvara’. The disciple for whom the sacrament for relieving him from the limited state of caste is not performed is also known as ‘samanya samayi’. The disciple for whom the sacrament for delivering him from the state conditioned by caste has been performed is known as ‘visesha samayi’. Those who have been initiated by the Guru’s eyes(cakshu diksha) and such other processes are called ‘paricarakas’(those qualified to do various services related to the worship). At the beginning of the creation, all Adisaivas have already been initiated by Lord Siva Himself. But, initiation in this birth is recommended for them for the sake of purity and competency for my worship.

A samhita is a well-settled scripture which is associated with four sections. The Agamas, Kamika and others, are known as the samhitas. The Saiva System is differentiated into four denominations – Saiva, Pasupata, Soma Siddhanta and Lakula. These four systems emerged from the four faces – Tatpurusha and others - of Lord Mahesvara. Of these, the one which precedes is superior to the one which succeeds, in its contents and satandard. In this way, there are four systems. Each of these systems is differentiated into three kinds – Vama, Dakshina and Siddhanta. Of these three, Siddhanta is declared to be the foremost one. Even among all these Siddhantas, it is declared that Saiva Siddhanta is the most supreme.

śaive proktaṁ ca sarvatra tadarthoktyā munīśvarāḥ
sarveṣāṁ kamikādīnāṁ śivadehatvaṁ iṣyate	47

The Saiva Scripture is the root-scripture. All the four Vedas have sprouted from it. So, even the Saiva Agams are sometimes stated as ‘Vaidika Sastras’, ‘Vedasara’ and such other appellations. O, Munisvaras!, all principles have been stated in the primary sense under all circumstances, in the Saiva Scripture. The competency of being the form(body) of Lord Siva has been declared to exist in the Kamika and other Agamas by those who have realized the Truth.

The Agamic form of Siva is said to be of two kinds – form in the order of creation and the form in the order of dissolution. The 28 Agamas from the Kamika to the Vatula constitute the form in the order of creation. The Agamas from the Vatula to the Kamika constitute the form in the order of dissolution. In the form of creative order, Kamika is the top crown adorning the Isana-face. Yogaja is the crown of Tatpurusha. Cintya is the crown of Aghora. Karana is the crown of Vamadeva. Ajita is the crown of Sadyojata. Dipta is the face of Isana. Sukshma is the face of Tatpurusha. Sahasra is the face of Aghora. Amsuman is the face of Vamadeva. Suprabheda is the face of Sadyojata. Vijaya constitutes the ears of Siva. Nisvasa is the neck. Svayambhuva is the heart. Anala is the navel. Vira is the hip. Raurava is the anus. Makuta is the stretch of right thigh. Vimala is the stretch of left thigh. Candrajnana is the lower end of right thigh. Bimba is the lower end of the left thigh. Prodigita is the right knee. Lalita is the left knee. Siddha is the right shin. Santana is the left shin. Sarvokta is the lower end of the right shin. Paramesvara is the lower end of the left shin. Kirana is the right foot. Vatula is the left foot. Thus, the Agamic form manifested in the order of creation has been told. In the order of dissolution, these Agamas are constituting the form in the reverse order.

The Sages:

O, Lord!, earlier, in the chapter dealing with the transmission of the Agamas, it was told that the Kamika constitutes the two feet and the succeeding Agams constitute various parts above the feet of the Lord. But, the Agamic form described just now seems to be different. These two descriptions are mutually contradicting.

The Lord:

O, the twice-born sages!, manifestation of my forms has been declared in many different ways. What I am going to tell you now is to be listened to by you with concentrated mind. My head adorned with crown is everywhere; similarly, my eyes are everywhere, my feet and hands are everywhere. These forms get variegated based on the difference observed in the sadhakas who meditate on me. On this ground, my form is differentiated in the order of creation and dissolution. O, the first-born sages, my form of consciousness(jnana deha) has manifested for the attainment of enjoyments and for the attainment of final liberation.

The statement revealed by Isvara is considered to be the most revered and unexcellable by the enlightened supreme saints. The statement issued by an enlightened seer(Rishi) could never be refuted by a common man. The statement issued by a divine being could never be refuted by a seer. The statement revealed by Brahma could never be refuted by a divine being. The statement revealed by Vishnu could never be refuted by Brahma. The statement issued by Siva could never be refuted by Vishnu. In this way, each succeeding one is superior to the preceding one. So it is declared that the Agamas which are the embodiment of the statements of Siva are superior to all others scriptures. They are irrefutable, always and at all times.

The five Agamas, from the Kamika to Ajita, emerged from the Isana face. Five Agamas, from the Dipta to Suprabhedha emanated from the Tatprusha face. Five Agamas, from the Vijaya to Vira , emerged from the Aghora face. Five Agamas, from the Raurava to Mukhabimba, emanated from the Vamadeva face. The eight Agamas, from the Prodigita to Vatula, emanated from the Sadyojata face. Previously, in the chapter dealing with the emanation of the Agamas, the revelation of the Kamika and others has been told beginning with the Sadyojata face and ending with Isana.

The one who has systematically studied and understood all the 28 Agamas along with their corresponding Upagamas is considered to be a Guru. Such a person is , indeed, Lord Siva Himself. One should assiduously take efforts to hear the instructions from such a foremost Guru. Such a supreme Guru is considered to be the competent authority for the rituals which have been commenced by another Guru who is not so qualified as that supreme Guru. But, in the rituals commenced by a well-qualified Guru, an ordinary priest has no authority to intervene and continue the work. In the rituals commenced by an ordinary Guru, the well-qualified supreme Guru could intervene and continue the work.

Participation of another Guru is allowed only at the cessation of the bodily existence of the supreme Guru. If another Guru is forcibly commissioned to perform the temple rituals, being ignorant of the severe ill-effects, even while the well-qualified supreme Guru is alive and working in the temple, such kind of pressurizing would lead to destruction, misfortunes and divisions among the people of the village. Children will be born blind or dumb in that village. The king would become a great sinner. Continuous fear would strike his country, without any reason or source. The one who does such improper activity and the one who directs him to do so would be considered as the sinners. Even the whole village is considered to have committed such a sinful deed.

Even if an insignificant object is dedicated to the supreme Guru for the sake of attaining the fame widespread over the world and great knowledge, such dedication would yield a beatific state of being desired by all and great fame widespread over all the worlds. Even the king should be known as the one who has attained these benefits. Honoring the Guru with significant donations is considered to be the most supreme virtuous deed. The one who forcibly takes away the wealth of such Guru is a sinner; an evil-minded. He should be known as the most despicable among the human beings. He is the one, to be neglected by the whole world.

O, the foremost twice-born sages!, now I speak on the performance of ‘satabhisheka’ (great ablution performed at the fulfilled stage of life). Such ablution is capable of averting the untimely death, of augmenting the longevity and health, effecting the abundant growth of the sources of grains and wealth and conducive to the healthy growth of sons and grandsons. For those who have been given the highest kind of initiation and who have seen the crescent for one thousand times, the auspicious ablution of fulfillment should be performed. During the northern course of the sun, preferably in the bright half of the lunar month, in an auspicious lunar day, in an auspicious star, in an auspicious day of a week and in an auspicious ‘lagna’, the Guru whose mind is calm and composed and who is associated with all the characteristic lineaments should perform this great ablution.

This ablution may be performed in a common hall which is associated with auspicious fresh sprouts, which is beautifully decorated or in a square pavilion or in a thatched shed which is designed in a pure location and which is charming to the mind. The breadth of such pavilion may be from 5 hastas to 55 hastas, the increment being 5 hastas each time. The pavilion may be rectangular in shape and it should be provided with four entrances. It may be with a single section or may be provided with 25 sections.

This auspicious ablution of fulfillment may be performed for those who have born in the four castes – brahmana, kshatriya, vaisya and sudra – and in the mixed caste. O, the twice-born sages!, especially this may performed for the king, spouses of the king, ministers, councilors and royal priests. O, the the Sivabrahmins!, this may be performed for the ladies who have born in each caste. Being adorned with five specific ornaments to be worn in five parts of the body, the Guru should perform this ablution.

In the night prior to the auspicious day fixed for the ‘satabhisheka’, the Guru should perform the ‘raksha bandhana’ (tying up the protective thread) for the ‘yajamana’ (the main person for whom the abhisheka is to be performed). The foremost Guru should tie up the protective thread in the right hand of the yajamana and in the left hand of his chief spouse (if he is married to more than one lady). If the chief spouses are in more number, he should tie up the protective thread for all of them. Having drunk the milk for his food, he should sleep there on the bed made of wool and such other materials, keeping his head in the south during that night.

Having constructed the pavilion with the help of a silpi according to the directions set forth earlier, the Guru should send off the silpi with due honors and perform the ritual known as ‘punyaha vacana’ (declaring the auspiciousness of the selected day, time and the event). Then, he should draw 14 lines from west to east and 14 lines from south to north over the interior ground of the pavilion. By such reticulation, 169 square grids would be formed over the ground. Having left out 25 grids at the central region, he should leave out one row around the 25 grids, providing 8 entrances in that row. There should be four entrances for the pavilion, in all the four directions. Such entrances could be formed by erasing two square grids. O, the sages highly skilled in such rituals! the remaining grids after such designing would be 108 in number.

The Guru should make a ‘sthandila’ (a raised platform) at its center with ‘sali’ kind of paddy whose measure should be one ‘drona’. This is for the sivakumbha. For the vardhani kalasa, half of this measure should be used. Sali-rice measuring one adhaka should be used for placing the kalasas. For the inferior type of sthandila, basic measure is one; for the medium type, two measures; for the superior type three measures. This is the order set forth for three levels of the superior type. If enough paddy is not available, one adhaka, half of an adhaka or one quarter of an adhaka of rice may be used for the inferior order. O, the foremost twice-born sages!, this is the measure of paddy in general. If sali-rice is not available, vrihi-rice may be used. The measure of unhusked rice should be half the measure of paddy. He should place the sesame whose measure should be half the measure of unhusked rice. Or, it may be with a measure of one quarter of unhusked rice. If the yajamana is with a least quantity of resources, the Guru may take one eighth of the aforesaid measure for the complete designing of the sthandila.

Sivakumbha filled up with 32 ‘prastas’ of pure water should be placed at the center. Vardhani kalasa should be placed by its side, filled up with 16 ‘prastas’ of pure water. The kalasas placed outside, around the siva-kumbha and vardhani-kalasa, should be filled up with one ‘adhaka’ of water. The siva-kumbha should be wound around with three stranded thread; vardhani, with two stranded thread; all other kalasas, with a single thread. Each kalasa should be adorned with separate cloth. After pouring the water collected from the sacred rivers into the siva-kumbha and other kalasas, the Guru should place the gold coin, sandal, agaru, karpura, kushtha, usira and kalka inside these vessels.

The kalasas should be deposited with different kinds of perfumes, different kinds of seeds, various kinds of ores, various kinds of metals, various kinds of herbs collected from various directions, various kinds of fruits, various kinds of flowers, various kinds of ‘panca gavya’ (mixture of five substances got from different cows). Having well arranged the kalasas in this way, the Guru should worship them with leaves and flowers. He should recite the mantric-names of 108 Rudras who are the presiding Lords of these 108 kalasas. For the sake of ‘naivedya’ the foremost Guru should place a separate collection of things in front of each kalasa. The siva-kumbha and the vardhani-kalasa should be dressed with two clothes. In the siva-kumbha, nine gems should be placed and in the vardhani, five gems should be placed.

The learned Guru should place the following eight metals in the eight kalasas arranged in the first enclosing row: gold, silver, copper, brass, lead, iron, tin and bell-metal. In the same way, he should place following 16 ‘dhatus’ (metallic ores) inside the 16 kalasas arranged in the second enclosure. The 16 ‘dhatus’ are: agaru, gandhaka, tala, maakshika, manassila, rasa, two kinds of abhraka, gairika, anjana, jatilinga, sindhura, tuttha, two kinds of vimala and kanta.

Two kinds of utpala flower, two kinds of lotus flower, vakula, karavira, paatala, kurava, maalati, munipushpa, nandyavarta and campaka – these 12 flowers should be placed inside the 12 kalasas arranged in the 12 grids formed in the south. Candana, usira, kushtha, kunkuma, nara, takkola, agaru, jati patra and lavanga – these nine substances should be placed by the Guru in the nine kalasas arranged in the nine grids formed in the south-west. Then, the grains to be placed inside the 12 kalasas kept in the west are told:

The Acharya, along with his assisting priests(murtipas), should take bath as usual, wear the new garments and apply three stripes of bhasma. He should wear the head-strip and the upper garment and adorn himself with five specific ornaments relevant to the five parts of his body and wear the gold ring. Then he should perform the worship at the entrances and do all other related rituals. He should worship Lord Siva in the siva-kumbha kept at the center, associated with the retinue Lords of all the five enclosures. He should worship Manonmani invoked in the vardhani-kalasa, if the spouse of the yajamana is only one. If there are several spouses for him, he should worship the same Manonmani in several vardhani-kalasas. This is the process, if the yajamana has already been initiated. If he is not initiated so far, the Guru should initiate him, performing the rituals related to the diksha.

He should design a fire-pit in the east, north-east, north or south and perform the fire rituals. Or, such fire ritual may be left out and the Guru may simply worship Lord Siva invoked in the siva-kumbha. Having performed such deeds as letting the flower to fall down on the linga depicted in the mandala through the yajamana, the Guru should perform the fire-ritual, attending to all specific rules. Then, he should worship Siva with sandal, flowers, light, incense and such other substances, in a specific way suitable to the context.

The learned Guru may construct nine or five fire-pits or only one fire-pit. He should offer the oblations with faggots, caru(rice cooked in the sacrificial pavilion), parched paddy, sesame, bamboo-rice and mashaka in the mentioned order and with all available substances which are fit for such fire ritual. The faggots got from the udmbara, vata, asvattha, plaksha should be offered in the fire-pits designed in the east, south, west and north respectively. The faggots got from the sami, khadira, maayuura and srivruksha should be offered in the fire-pits in the south-east, south-west, north-west and north-east. The faggots of palasa tree should be offered in the principal fire-pit. The oblations should be offered with the recital of the mula mantra, brahma-mantras and anga-mantras, in the due order. Such oblations should be offered with all the substances mentioned before even in the principal fire-pit designed for Sivasakti.

Oblations with the recital of mula-mantra should be offered for 100 or 50 times. One tenth of such oblations should be offered with the recital of brahma-mantras and anga-mantras, separately for each mantra. Having completed the fire-ritual in this way, the Guru should spend the remaining period of the night there. In the next morning, the foremost Guru should perform the necessary rituals in the principal fire-pit and do the activities concerned with the initiated yajamana.

If the yajamana has not been initiated previously, the Guru should worship Lord Siva invoked in the siva-kumbha, reciting the five syllabled mula mantra only. He should worship Gauri(Sivasakti) , reciting the mula mantra 'Om sivayai namah'. He should worship Rudras invoked in all other kalasas, reciting the five syllabled mantra. Such worship should be done for the fulfillment of diksha, in the case of the yajamana who has not been initiated before. For the same purpose, he should prepare a specific mandala known as 'sarvatobhadra' beautified with strong and light colors. Such mandala should be designed for the deliverance from the effects of all the sinful deeds and for the attainment of all the desired fruits.

The Guru should lead the yajamana who has taken the ceremonial bath in the early morning, who has besmeared the bhasma over his body, well adorned with the fitting ornaments and who is associated with all kinds of adorning materials, to the sacrificial pavilion. He should direct the yajamana to wash his feet and hands and to take three sips of water (acamana). The yajamana who is now with calm and composed mind should be led to the south entrance of the sacrificial pavilion. The Guru should sprinkle the consecrated water over him reciting the pranava-mantra and direct him to offer the handful of flowers at the feet of Siva, to circumambulate and to prostrate before the Lord.

He should direct him to worship Lord Siva who is present in the kumbha, the mandala and in the fire-pit in the manner prescribed above and the make him seated on the altar meant for the performance of ceremonial bath. He may be seated on the bhādra-pitha made of the timber got from the trees known for their juicy sap or from the mango, panasa, bilva, jambu trees or from the brahma vruksha. For the King, a specific hallowed plate provided with 1000 holes should be used for performing the ablution. For all others, such a plate provided with 100 holes should be used. Such a holed plate may be made of gold, silver or other metals so as to be associated with all sorts of decorative patterns. At the end, the ablution should be made with the water mixed with myrobalan fruit and other substances. Having been bathed with other substances, the yajamana should wipe his body with a cleaned cloth and remove the drops and streaks of water spread over his body and attire himself with new clothes.

The yajamana who has besmeared his body with sandal paste and other perfumes and has adorned with fragrant flowers and garlands, should be seated on the pedestal. The Guru, having arranged for the designing of a sthandila over the ground besmeared with cow-dung and decorated with various depictions drawn with rice flour, should place a specific seat known as 'bhadrasana' over the sthandila. Then, he should place the tiger-skin along with a new cloth and a lotus-flower made of gold over the bhadrasana and seat the yajamana and his spouse who have now been bathed in all dignified ways, at the center of the bhadrasana. He should give them three sips of consecrated water and make them to be with mantric-body through the nyasa of the relevant mantras and offer them sandal paste and garlands to be worn on the shoulders. He should make them to be adorned with fragrant flowers, garlands and such other materials and to appear with all sorts of adornment. Then he should cover them with a long and valuable sheet of cloth. He should place several vessels containing all kinds of grains to be in front of them on the ground besmeared with cow-dung and fragrant pastes. He should also place a vessel containing the honey along with a gold flower. Next, he should enable them see the milk-yielding cow associated with its calf.

The yajamana and his spouse should be there, being with much delighted heart, being honored and worshipped by their relatives and being gifted with new clothes, gold ring, gold flower and such other valuable things. Then they should be mounted on the palanquin or on a decorated car accompanied by the rendering of musical songs and the sounding of various musical instruments and they should be led to circumambulate the city or village. Having reached the entrance of the house, the front of which has been besmeared with cow-dung and other pastes, decorated with auspicious fresh sprouts, 'purna kumbha', lighted lamps placed over wooden stool, the Guru should direct them to get down from the palanquin or the decorated car and stand in front of the entrance. Then he should direct a competent person to wash their feet with milk and water. Then he should direct the competent ladies to circumambulate them three times while letting down the continuous flow of water mixed with turmeric powder and holding the lighted lamp. Finally, with their feet on the foot-stool, they should enter their own house.

This is the supreme process of performing the ablution of fulfillment. This ablution may be performed with 49 kalasas, 25 kalasas, 9 kalasas or 5 kalasas. Or, at the least, with only one kalasa, this great and auspicious ablution may be performed.

The yajamana should honor the Guru by presenting him the sacrificial fees in a superior scale, medium scale or lower scale, according to his resources. He may present him the female servants, male servants, suitable field for cultivation, cows and various instruments and utensils fit for the household utility. Then, he should honor the assisting priests followed by those who were engaged in the incantation of mantras.

Next, he should honor those who were reciting the Vedic and devotional hymns and then honor all the devotees who have assembled there on this auspicious occasion. He may honor them and present the honorific fees to all of them according to his resources, as told earlier.

To a person who arranges for the performance of such great and auspicious ablution for himself, a perfect mind engrossed in the performance of virtuous deeds would occur. In this very birth itself, he would become the one blessed with abundant wealth and good descendents. He would be victorious always and everywhere. He would be blessed with longevity, good health and the fulfillment of the fruits as desired by him. Having enjoyed the family life along with his spouse, sons, daughters and other descendents, he would finally attain the supreme abode of bliss.

In a country where the directions for the performance of such ablution of fulfillment(satabhisheka) are observed and executed, untimely death will not occur there. There will be no poverty; no the evil-doers; no misfortunes and calamities ; no encroachment by the enemies and no devastation. The clouds would shower the rains in appropriate seasons in that country. There would be abundance of food and grains. The king would be always victorious. All the beings would be with pacified and fulfilled heart. The lakes and such other sources would be with full of water.

O, the foremost twice-born sages!, now I speak on the directions for performing certain rites to atone for the defects and violations, in a general way. The Agamic injunctions are of two kinds – those which command to do without fail(vidhi) and those which command not to do, which command to desist from certain deeds (nishiddha). By observing and following the vidhis, one could earn the accumulation of virtuous effects. Performance of the deeds in a contradictory way, violating the rules, lead to non-virtuous effects; by such performance, there would occur great sin. When an inevitable downfall has occurred due to violations and omissions, the rite by doing which a person who has committed such violation and omission is relieved of such defects and is enabled to reach the supreme abode of bliss is called ‘prayascitta’. Thus, it is held in this Agama.

प्रकृष्टायास्समानत्वादोषः प्रायः प्रकीर्तितः।

चिदात्मा कथितश्शास्त्रे तरणं तु तकारतः ॥ ४

सदोषस्यात्मनो यस्मात् तरणं पततो ह्यधः।

तस्मात्प्रकीर्तितं विप्राः प्रायश्चित्तं शिवाश्रिताः ॥ ५

prakṛṣṭāyāssamānatvāddoṣaḥ prāyaḥ prakīrtitaḥ
cidātmā kathitaśśāstre taraṇaṁ tu takārataḥ 	4
sadoṣasyātmano yasmāt taraṇaṁ patato hyadhah
tasmātprakīrtitaṁ viprāḥ prāyaścittaṁ śivāśritāḥ 	5

It is set forth in this Agama that the word ‘praya’ denotes a defect which has been committed very intensely or in a general way; ‘cit’ denotes the individual self; ‘ta’ denotes crossing over. O, the twice-born sages who have always resorted to Lord Siva!, a deed by doing which the individual self which is associated with the defect of violation is rescued from falling down to the hellish worlds is declared to be ‘prayascitta’.

विधिर्निषेधो वा नास्ति यस्मिन् कर्मण्यनुष्ठिते।
तस्मिन् पुण्यं च पापं वा नेति शास्त्रार्थ निश्चयः ॥	६
आवश्यके कृते पूर्वमुखेनैव प्रतिक्रिया।
कर्तव्या पश्चिमास्येन कोणास्येन न वेति च ॥	७

vidhirniṣedho vā nāsti yasmin karmaṇyanuṣṭhite
tasmin puṇyaṁ ca pāpaṁ vā neti śāstrārtha niścayaḥ 	6
āvaśyake kṛte pūrvamukhenaiva pratikriyā
kartavyā paścimāsyena koṇāsyena na veti ca 	7

If the deeds, for which the directions as to “should do” or “should not do” are not prescribed in the authentic Scriptures, are performed, there would be neither merit(punya) nor demerit(papa). This is the truth ascertained in the authentic Scriptures. If the deeds which are to be essentially done are performed facing the east, there is no need for ‘prayscitta’. But, if the same deeds are performed facing the west or any one of the corner directions, ‘prayascitta’ has to be inevitably done.

प्रायश्चित्तं विभेदेन न शक्यं वक्तुमग्रजाः।

ततो निगद्यते लेशात् प्रायश्चित्तं सनातनम्।

karmaṇāmapyanantatvād granthavistāradoṣataḥ 	8
tato nigadyate leśāt prāyaścittaṁ sanātanam

O, the first-born sages!, since the rites of atonement have been told elaborately in many different ways, it is not possible to explain all these to you now. Even the deeds are endless. If all these are told, there would occur the defect of elaborating the text unnecessarily. So the details of ‘prayscitta’ which are coming down through the ages are now told briefly.

The features of certain rites of atonement, having selected such rites from those which are elaborated in the Scriptures are told here. The Guru who has born in the lineage of Siva-brahmins, the lineage which manifested as related to the five ‘siva-gocaras’, who is adorned with head-strip, upper garment and attired in new clothes, who is wearing the five significant ornaments on the five parts of his body, should perform the rites of atonement.

The rites of atonement recommended for alleviating the evil effects of supernatural occurrences (adbhuta santi) should be done immediately, without postponing the time. While performing the rites of atonement, there is no need to look into the features of the day, half-month, lunar mansion, lagna and such other factors. The 'prayascitta' which is done immediately is considered to be the foremost. Performance of prayascitta within 7 days is considered to be of medium type; within 15 days is considered to be of inferior type; within one month is considered to be in lower grade. Prayascitta should not be performed beyond the lapse of one month. If it is to be inevitably done beyond one month, it should be performed along with 'santi-homa'.

O, the foremost among the twice-borns!, the rites of atonement should be performed under the context of installation of Linga, pedestal, super structure (vimana) and such others (because, knowingly or unknowingly, some defects or violations could have occurred). When the Linga and the pitha (pedestal) are being joined, if the situation for prayascitta occurs in the beginning, in the middle or in the end of the event, it should be done immediately. If the yajamana (main sponsor, karta), Guru or the assisting priest neglects the performance of prayascitta, due to unavailability of enough resources or due to confusion of the mind or due to the defect of likes and dislikes or being smitten by the effects of evil deeds committed previously, such persons are considered to be those who are opposing me. They have born to bring discredit to the king and they are responsible for the much agitated and disturbed state of the country. They are to be punished and instructed by my devotees and by the mendicants who are free from the vices of desire and delusion. Even those persons who plunder the assets and the belongings of the temple and the lands dedicated to the Lord, are fit for such punishment.

Those who perform the rites of atonement with whole hearted involvement and diligence are considered to be my devotees, to be foremost among the people. The are cosidered to be those who do good deeds for the welfare of the king, to be the doers of meritorious deeds, good-minded persons devoted to the nourishment of the country; to be those who toil for the sustained growth of the city or village and to be those who are responsible for the growth of the temple site and for the continued performance of my worship. Having understood the greatness of such devotees, the Guru should perform the rites of atonement, taking all the possible efforts.

For the sake of prayscitta, the guru should do the incantation of the mantras, after doing the bhasma-snana (bath done with vibhuti) according to the prescribed rules. Having rendered his body to be identical with the mantras and facing the north or east and wearing the rosary of rudraksha , he should do the incantation of siva-mula- mantra, aghora mantra, pasupata-astra mantra, aghora-astra mantra, sivastra mantra or the brahma-mantras and the anga-mantras.

Or, he may do the japa of 'mela mantra', from one hundred times to one parardha times, contemplating his body to be identical with the form of mantra, taking moderate food or taking the 'havis' for his food. He may do the incantation without taking any food, or eating the food obtained as alms or taking the milk. Vegetables, leaves, grains of barley collected from the cow-dung, oil-cakes, bulbous roots, roots of plants, fruits – taking any one of these for his food and meditating on the form of the corresponding Deity, he should do the incantation and dedicate the japa to the Lord.

The process of incantation has been told. Now, the the process of circumambulation is explained. Different processes of circumambulation have been set forth in the Agams. Mainly, circumambulation is of two kinds - interior and the exterior. The superior and moderate type of circumambulation done between the Linga and the outer enclosure of the temple have been told in the Agamas. From the circumambulation done in the first enclosure(antar mandala) to the one done in the fifth enclosure, the succeeding one is superior to the previous one. (That is, circumambulation done in the fifth enclosure is the most supreme) . It is not possible to do the circumambulation inside the main shrine(garba geha). Such performance within the main shrine would yield adverse effects. Because, the shadow of the Linga will always be there in the main shrine and there would be the flowers and garlands removed from the Linga and heaped on the interior ground. Moreover, the main shrine is associated with the beginning of the 'somasutra' (meant for draining the ablution-water) and the close proximity of Siva. So, circumambulation inside the main shrine should be avoided.

Avoiding the main shrine, circumambulation done in all other places are conducive to the attainment of all the desired fruits. Even in the antar mandala(first enclosure), one could see the soma sutra(ablution drain). The heaps of nirmalya(removed flowers and garlands) and the shadow of the vimana and other structures of the temple could be seen up to half the extent of the temple or up to the whole extent of the temple. Having left out all such areas of nirmalya and shadow, one should do the circumambulation in clockwise direction.

The circumambulation may be done in the left to right mode(savya) as well as in the right to left mode(apa savya). The 'savya' is going up to the shrine of Candessvara. The 'apasavya' is going up to the soma sutra. Placing the steps in slow phase, one should do the right and left circumambulation, taking care to see that the soma sutra is never crossed over. This is the process of doing the right and left circumambulation. During the daily festival and during the grand festival, walking over the shadow fallen inside the temple and doing other services do not become defective. The circumambulation being done outside the soma sutra would never become defective.

aṅgapradakṣiṇam cānyad udayāstamanāntakam
anayoḥ puṇya mātmyam na śaktum vaktumagrajāḥ	42

In the circumambulation to be done in the outside, with great care and effort, one has to place innumerable steps. In such circumambulation, for each step the devotee attains the benefit equal to ten times the benefit to be derived by the performance of a horse-sacrifice. There is another superior type of circumambulation known as 'anga pradakshina' (stretching one's own body over the ground like a fallen staff and rolling around the temple in clockwise direction). O, the first-born sages!, no one is capable of speaking on the greatness of the merit derived from doing the 'anga pradakshina' through the whole day, from the sunrise to the sunset.

O, the foremost among the twice-born sages!, now I will explain the rites of atonement to be performed with 'siva-amba' (siva tirtha, siva-water) and krucchra (a kind of fasting penance) and such others. The Guru should design a sthandila making use of the recommended grains and place a kumbha or kalasa over it. The kalasa or kumbha should be wound around with suitable thread and adorned with new cloth and it should be furnished with gold coin, water, bunch of darbha-grass, sandal and others. Having worshipped the kalasa with the recital of siva-mantra, brahma mantras and anga mantras, the Guru should inspirit the water contained in the kalsa with the incantation of siva-mantra, brahma mantras and anga mantras. Such consecrated water is declared as 'sivamba'. (This water should be poured over the disciple for whom the rite of atonement is being done and sprinkled over the hall). If the water of the kalasa is inspirited with the incantation of astra-mantra, then it is called 'astrodam'.

Then, the details related to various kinds of kṛcchra are told. Prajapatya kṛcchra, tapta kṛcchra, ati kṛcchra, paraka kṛcchra, candrayana kṛcchra – these are various kinds of kṛcchra. Taking the food only at night for three consecutive days and being on fast without taking any food for three consecutive days – this is called ‘prajapatya kṛcchra’. Taking hot water for three consecutive days, milk for the next three consecutive days, taking the hot ghee for the next three consecutive days and being on fast without taking any food for the next three consecutive days - this is considered as ‘tapta kṛcchra’. Then, the procedure for the ‘ati kṛcchra’ is told.

Being on fast without taking any kind of food for twelve consecutive days is considered as ‘paraka kṛcchra’. Increasing one mouthful of food day by day during the bright half of the lunar month and decreasing one mouthful of food day by day during the dark half of the same lunar month – this is called ‘candrayana kṛcchra’. Instead of food, one may resolve to drink water alone by increasing and decreasing in the same manner. One may commence the complete fast(upavasa) either in the evening, in the beginning of a day, in the end of a day or in a time between morning and evening. On such fast, he should desist from taking all the four kinds of food. For the sake of atonement, one may opt for offering donations and gifts when the fast is being observed in the beginning of a day or the end of a day. The procedure of being on fast has been told. Then, the rite of atonement known as ‘santi’ is explained.

A pavilion should be erected in the auspicious direction or in the south-east, following the rules set forth earlier for such construction. At the center of the pavilion, the Guru should design a fire-pit whose shape should be circular, its diameter being one hasta. Having sent off the Silpi who has assisted in the construction of the pavilion and the fire-pit, the Guru should perform the ‘punyaha vacana’(ascertaining and declaring the auspiciousness of the day, time and event) and purification of the ground. Having consecrated the image of the Deity, he should perform ‘snapana abhisheka’ on each day of prayascitta. Having worshipped the Deity with abundance of perfumes, flowers and such other paraphernalia, the Guru should commence the rite known as ‘santi’.

Having purified and consecrated the fire-pit and the fire enkindled in it with essential sacramental rituals, the Guru should offer the oblations for the siva-mantra and the samhita mantras. He should install the aghora astra, siva-astra, pasupata-astra or another kind of aghora-astra, near the fire-pit. Having worshipped the main Deity at the pericarp of the lotus conceived in the fire, he should offer the oblations.

The oblations should be made with the recommended faggots, clarified butter, five substances got from the cow, three kinds of honey(trimadhu), sesame, durva-grass, unbroken rice grains and with unmixed food or with ‘payasa’. The oblations may be offered for 1000, 500 or 108 times, on each day making use of the substances listed now. Reciting the relevant mantra first, he should offer these oblations. At the interval of every 10, 15 or 100 recital of the mantra, he should recite the specific mantra “bhagavan, sarvakshoba nasam kuru kuru svaha”. Having completed the offering of oblations, he should offer the consummate oblation(purnahuti).

He should offer ‘tambula’ associated with ‘mukhavasa’ to the Deity invoked in the fire. Arrangement should be made by the Guru for the recital of ‘Sivajnana Sastras’ – Kamika and other Mulagamas – in the five directions. Having seated in each direction, the priests who have well mastered these Agamas should recite the Agamas which emanated in each direction from the faces of Lord Siva. In the east, the Agamas which were revealed through Tatpuruṣa face should be recited. The Agamas which were revealed through Aghora face should be recited in the south. The Agamas which were revealed through Vamdeva face should be recited in the north. The Agamas which were revealed through Sadyojata face should be recited in the west. The Agamas which were revealed through Isana face should be recited in the north-east. Such recital should be done by the initiated priests.

Four priests who have well mastered the four Vedas should recite the Rg Veda and others, seated in the four directions beginning from the east. One or many persons may recite various hymns selected from the compilation of sacred hymns. Such persons should have been consecrated with ‘siva-diksha’ and their mind should be in oneness with the core meaning of the hymns. All these rites should be done by the well-trained priests who have taken the ceremonial bath duly and who are experts in promoting the systematic performance of homa.

Having collected the protective ashes(homa raksha) from the fire, the Guru should offer the ‘paranmukha arghya’ (arghya water offered to make the Deity turned away) to the Deity invoked in the fire and then the ‘nirodha arghya’ (arghya water to arrest the departure of the Deity). Then, he should offer the interior bali and the exterior bali. Having taken the acamana water, the Guru should render his body to be identical with the Deity through relevant nyasa and enter into the main shrine of the Deity. Having dedicated the benefits of the fire-ritual and the entire process of the atonement to the Deity, he should entreat the Deity for nullifying the ill-effects of all the misdeeds. Thus the process of ‘santi’ has been told. Such santi is of nine kinds based on the number of the days it is performed. Santi performed in one day, three days, five days, seven days, nine days, fourteen days, fifteen days, twenty-one days and twenty-seven days. In all through these days, the homa should be done continuously, without any interruption.

‘Visarjana’(sending off the Fire-deity) from the fire-pit is not recommended here, as is usually done in the fire-pit constructed in other occasions for the Lord according to the settled rules. There may be ‘visarjana’ for the Deity; but not for the fire, here. Thus, the process of ‘santi’ which is capable of annihilating all the ill-effects of the defective deeds has been told.

Then, the directions for the performance of santi homa for the sake of warding off the ill-effects born of defective deeds are set forth. This santi homa is of two kinds. Details of the superior one are explained first. In a sacrificial pavilion erected in an auspicious direction or in the south-east and decorated well with canopies and garlands, the Guru should design a sthandila and place a ghata(pot) at its center. This ghata should have been wound around with thread, filled up with water, adorned with new cloth and furnished with bunch of darbhas and lotus flower made of gold. Its sides, neck and other parts should have been besmeared with the paste of white sandal. It should be furnished with fruit and tender leaves. Around this central pot, he should place eight kalasas, one in each direction, furnished with cloth, bunch of darbhas and other materials. Then he should invoke the presence of 'pasupata-astra' in the central pot and worship it with due honors.

The form of Pasupata-astra- Deva should be meditated upon as: Mounted on the pedestal of Omkara(OM), the unassailable Lord with great strength, associated with five faces, ten ears, three eyes in each face, having large fangs in his wide-opened mouth, face and looks expressing excessive anger and force, emitting the sounds of loud roaring, invincible, adorned with the garland of skulls, his head adorned with the digit of half-moon, squint-eyed, adorned with big garlands and the serpent-ornament, wearing snakes on various parts of his body, appearing with the resplendence of ten millions of sun, capable of crushing down the multitudes of obstacles, holding in his right hands bhairva-astra, sword, bow, great trident, abhaya-mudra and noose, holding in his left hands shield, arrow, skull, varada-mudra, and the dart-weapon, appearing with tawny colored beard and moustache and tawny-colored matted hairs. Having contemplated the terrific form of Pasupata-astra-Deva in this way, the Guru should commence the worship of this Astra , reciting the relevant mantra.

phaḍantān praṇavopetān vajrāḍīn kalaśeṣu tān
iṣṭvā gandhāḍibhirdevaṁ naivedyāntaṁ samarcayet 	13

The mantra for the pasupata-astra is associated with the words ‘om’, ‘slim’, ‘pam’, ‘s’um’, ‘hum’ and ‘phat’. The seed letter ‘om’ should be worshipped in the south-east; ‘slim’ in the north-east; ‘pam’ in the south-west; ‘s’um’ in the north-west. The six seed letters, from ‘om’ to ‘phat’ should be used for the six mantras, from the hrudaya mantra to the astra mantra. All these six mantras should be associated with the word ‘pasupata’. The mantras of the ten retinue-weapons, vajra and others, should end with the word ‘phat’ and these should be worshipped in the ten kalasas placed around the main pot. The Guru should worship Pasupata-astra-Deva with sandal, flowers and such other substances and complete the worship by the offering of naivedya.

Having made a circular fire-pit with an extent of one hasta or a sthandila in front of the kalasas, the Guru should purify it as done before with five sacramental rites. In the fire raised in the fire-pit and purified, he should invoke the presence of Pasupata-astra-Deva along with his retinue, worship him and offer the oblations. The oblations should be made with the recommended faggots, clarified butter, sesame, milk, white grass and cooked rice(caru). Reciting the mula mantra of Pasupata-astra and stating the intended deed of atonement, he should offer each oblation. The oblations may be made in this way for 1000, 500 or 108 times. “Bhagavan, ...dosha santim kuru kuru” – these words declaring the intended deed of atonement should be associated with each recital of the mula mantra.

One tenth of the oblations done with the mula mantra shod be offered with the anga-mantras and for the ten weapons. With such oblations, the Guru should make the Deity to be content and delighted.

kumbāddevaṁ visṛjyātha dvādaśānte niyojayet 	21

Contemplating the form of Pasupata-astra-Deva and reciting the mula mantra of this astra, the Guru should offer the consummate oblation and contemplating the same, he should offer the oblations meant for atonement. Having offered the ‘purna ahuti’ once again, he should offer the ‘tambula’ and offer the ‘paranmukha arghya’. Having performed the rituals related to the anga mantras, he should do the necessary deeds to keep the enkindled fire alive and vibrant till the completion of the rites of atonement. Or, the Guru may create the fire afresh on each day till the end of atonement and offer the oblations to the Lord who has taken the form of Pasupata-astra. Having offered the interior bali and exterior bali, the Guru should take acamana-water and render his body to be identical with the mantra-form of the Lord. Having dedicated the entire course of the rites of atonement to the Lord, he should entreat Him to grant the desired benefit. Having lifted the Lord out of the kumbha, he should install Him within his own self to be always present in his ‘dvadasanta’.

kartavyaśśāntihomo'yaṁ śāntyukta dinasaṁkhyayā 	23

Then the Guru should sprinkle the consecrated water contained in the kumbha all around the precincts. This fire ritual may be performed with faggots, clarified butter, cooked rice and others, even without installation of kumbha. This ‘santi homa’ should be performed according to the number of days prescribed for ‘santi’ earlier.

sthaṇḍilam vā samāpādy prokṣayedastṛavāriṇā 	4

Then I will explain the process of performing the 'disa homa'. It is two kinds - the one related to atonement (prayascittanga) and the other related to snapana and others (snapnadyanga). The atonement may be related to Linga, image, pedestal, individual shrine or temple building as a whole, hall, malika (a raised structure having two or more floors) and others, the root and bottom part of the temple-tree and such others. For whichever may be the atonement, square pavilion or thatched shed should be erected in all the four directions around the one taken for atonement. Having constructed such a pavilion or shed, the Guru should make four fire-pits, one in each direction. The fire-pits may be square or circular in shape, having an extent of one hasta. Or, he may design a sthandila in each direction. Having done so, he should purify them by sprinkling the consecrated water over them with the recital of astra mantra.

Or, for all the forms or things for which atonement has to be performed, the pavilion may be erected in all the four sides of the temple. Or, there may be only one pavilion or shed and all the concerned rituals may be done there itself. An altar should be designed at the center of the hall for the arrangement of the kalasas. Four fire-pits should be made around the altar, one in each direction. All the preparatory rituals and sacramental rites should be completed in that yagasala. O, the foremost among the sages!, the Guru may make another fire-pit in the north-east of the hall for the offering of oblations to Lord Siva associated with His retinue Lords of brahma mantras and anga mantras.

Having worshipped Lord Siva either in the Linga or in the sthandila and others according to the prescribed directions, the foremost Guru should worship Sivastra invoked and installed in front of Lord Siva. The form of Siva-astra-Deva should be meditated as: Having four faces, glowing hairs on the head, appearing with the effulgence of innumerable lightnings converged together, his head adorned with half-moon, having four hands, issuing out frequently the sounds of thunder, unassailable, endowed with incredible prowess, having twelve eyes, holding the sakthi-weapon, trident, abhaya-mudra and varada-mudra in his four hands. Having contemplated the form of Sivastra in this way, the Guru should worship it with sandal, flowers and other substances, reciting the mula mantra pertaining to it. Aghora-astra should be worshipped in the south; Pasupata-astra should be worshipped in the west; Pratyangira-astra should be worshipped in the north. Now, the form of Pratyangira-astra to be meditated and the mantra pertaining to it are told.

Of this mula mantra, seven letters starting from ‘om’ constitute the hrudaya mantra; the next fifteen letters constitute the siro mantra; next ten letters constitute the sikhā mantra; next seven letters constitute the kavaca mantra; next seven letters constitute the netra mantra; next thirty letters constitute the astra mantra of Pratyangira. The gayatri mantra of Pratyangira is formed by thirteen letters and her savitri mantra is formed by seven letters(of the mula mantra). The six anga mantras, hrudaya to astra, should be ended with ‘namah’, ‘svaha’, ‘vashat’, ‘hum’, ‘vaushat’ and ‘phat’ respectively.

The form of Pratyangira Devi is associated with the following lineaments: Lion-face, sharp and terrific fangs, upraised matted hair on the head with the resplendence of fiery flames, complexion like a black collyrium, three eyes in round shape and in blood-like red color, holding the trident and drum in her right hands, holding the severed head and tender mango-leaf in her left hands, attired in black clothes, face appearing with streaks of blood and pieces of flesh, taking delight in dancing, adorned with ornaments made of pearl, all of her limbs beautified with respective ornaments, frequently raising the noises of loud laughter and dressed with the skin of black antelope – having meditated upon such a terrific form of Pratyangira, the Guru should worship her with sandal, flowers and other substances.

If not in this way, the Guru may place five kalasas, each one on a separate sthandila and worship the five astras. The kalasas should be wound around with thread, covered with new cloth, filled up with water perfumed with essential ingredients, furnished with bunch of darbhas and lotus-flower made of gold, associated with a fitting lid and tender mango leaves and their sides and neck besmeared with sandal paste. In the kalasa kept at the center, Prtyangira Devi should be worshipped. As explained before, four astras, aghora astra and others, should be worshipped in the four directions around the central kalasa and the pratyangira-astra should be worshipped at the center. Having worshipped in this way, the Guru should entreat for the permission from the Devi to perform the fire-ritual and enter into the sacrificial hall.

Each one of the assisting priest, along with the Guru(Chief Acharya), should first purify the fire-pit allocated to him with sacramental rites and the fire kindled in it, invoke the presence of the concerned Deity and astra belonging to his fire-pit along with the retinue Deities , worship them with sandal, flowers and other substances and offer the oblations according to the directions set forth in the Scripture. As detailed earlier, the learned priests , having seated in the recommended direction and being with collected and concentrated mind, should recite the Vedas and Agamas, do the incantation of mantras, and recite the sacred hymns in praise of the Lord.

The recommended faggots for this fire-ritual are : plaksha, udumbara, asvattha and vata for the fire-pits designed in the east, south, west and north respectively and palasa for the principal fire-pit. Or, palasa may be used for all the fire-pits. Sesame, clarified butter, durva-grass, faggots and ‘caru’-these should be used for offering the oblations. Each faggot should be soaked in the milk, its length being 12 angulas. Being completely involved in the meditation upon the concerned Deva and the astra, each priest should offer these as oblations. With each substance, the oblations should be made separately for 100 or 50 times.

Then, the oblations for the sake of atonement and subsequently the consummate oblation should be made associated with the offering of tumbula. The Guru should collect the ashes from the fire-pit to be used for protection and offer it to the main Deity. Having offered the ‘nirodha arghya’, he should perform the ‘layanga’ worship and display the ‘sannirodhana’ mudra. Then he should offer the interior bali and exterior bali and take three sips of water(acamana). Having rendered his body to be one with the mantra, the Guru should enter into the shrine and humbly dedicate the fire-ritual and the related rites to the Lord and entreat Him for the bestowal of His Grace. Having applied the protective ashes on his own body, the Guru should first give the protective ashes to the yajamana (the main person who has arranged for the ritual) and then orderly distribute it to all those devotees who have assembled there.

The Guru should bathe the Lord with the consecrated water contained in the kalasas and worship Him, if these rituals have been done within the precincts of the temple. If the rite of atonement has been done in the house of an individual, the Guru should sprinkle the consecrated water over the yajamana. Thus, the process of Disa homa which is capable of warding off all misfortunes and distress has been told.

With regard to the second type of Disa homa, a specific variation is now told. In this type, the invocation and worship of Pratyangira and other astras is not recommended. The oblations should be made with the faggots, clarified butter, cooked rice, sesame, pure and unbroken rice grains in the four directions starting from the east, with the recital of tatpurusha, aghora, vama and sadyojata mantras respectively. This kind of Disa homa should be performed as an associate ritual of snapana-abhisheka. Such performance has been recommended in the Agamas.

Then I will explain the process of 'samhita homa' which is capable of annihilating all the ill-effects of defective or improper deeds. This samhita homa may be performed in the fire-pit in which oblations are offered daily or in the fire-pit meant for a grand festival. The fire-pit or the sthandila should be made in an auspicious direction or in the south-east. The brahma mantras and the anga mantras are collectively called 'samhita mantras' in the Agamas.

In the fire raised and purified with the recital of samhita mantras, the Guru should invoke the presence of Siva and worship Him with sandal, flowers and other substances. Then, he should offer the oblations with the faggots of palasa and cooked rice for 100 times, with the recital of siva-mula-mantra. One tenth of the oblations made with the mula mantra should be offered with the recital of brahma mantras and anga mantras. Then, he should offer these oblations for 25 times, with recital of aghora mantra. Having finished the offering of oblations for the sake of atonement, the Guru should offer the consummate oblation(purna ahuti) in the way prescribed for it. This is the process of performing the samhita homa. Next, the process of ‘murti homa’ is explained.

In a pavilion erected in front of the temple or in some other suitable place, the Guru should design a sthandila and install the siva kumbha at its center. He should install vardhani kumbha(sakti kalasa) on the right side of siva kumbha. He should place eight kalasas in eight directions(one in each direction) in which eight weapons, vajra and others, are to be invoked and worshipped. These kumbhas and kalasas should have been wound around with thread, provided with suitable lid and covered with new cloth. These should be filled up with water perfumed with recommended ingredients and furnished with gold coin or gold lotus. Having worshipped Siva in the central kumbha with sandal, flowers, incense and light, he should worship the aghora astra in the vardhani kalasa.

If not in this way, the Guru may place only one kumbha at the center of the sthandila and worship the aghora- astra-raja along with his retinue Deities in that kumbha, without placing the kumbhas for Siva and Sakti. He should offer the seat for the Astra-raja, reciting the mantra “ astrasanaya hum phan namah”. He should conceive the form of the Astra-raja, reciting the mantra “ astramurtaye hum phan namah”.

The Guru should meditate on the form of Aghora-astra as appearing with the brilliance of thousand suns, emitting loud sounds like the thundering clouds which arise at the time of final dissolution, his bright teeth illuminating even the extreme end of the directions, his face and neck being very bright, having three eyes, tongue flashing forth like the streak of lightning, shiny beard, moustache and hair, wearing the snake as his sacred thread, his four hands holding the trident, small sword, sakti-weapon and small pestle, having four faces, his head being adorned with resplendent half-moon, appearing in dancing posture and with huge form, adorned with serpent-ornament and subduing the conceited devas, asuras and daityas. In the eight directions around the Aghora-astra, he should worship eight weapons from vajra to trident. In the north-east, he should worship padma-weapon and in the south-west, the cakra-weapon.

The Guru should kindle the fire in the fire-pit designed in front of kalasas to be circular in shape with an extent of one hasta or kindle the fire over the sthandila designed and consecrated with sacramental rites. Having sanctified the fire with five kinds of sacramental rituals according to the directions given in the chapter dealing with fire-ritual, he should invoke the presence of Aghora-astra-Deva along with his retinue Deities in that siva-fire and worship him. Then he should offer the oblations with the faggots, clarified butter, sesame, milk, white durva-grass, trimadhu and the rice cooked in the sacrificial hall for 1000, 500 or 100 times. With each of the substances mentioned above, he should make 1000, 500 or 100 oblations for the sake of Aghora-astra-Deva invoked in the siva-fire.

He should offer the oblations with the recital of anga mantras and astra mantra associated with the declaration of the purpose of the intended rites of atonement. Then he should offer the consummate oblation and complete the rituals related to the atonement. Once again he should offer the consummate oblation and tambula, eulogize the Astra Deva, bow down before him and entreat him to grant the desired benefit. Then he should collect the 'homa raksha' (ashes from the fire-pit) for his own use and for the use of yajamana. Having offered paranmukha-arghya, he should perform the 'layanga' worship and declare the nature and completion of the atonement-ritual to Siva.

Without doing 'visarjana' (sending off) for the fire, the Guru should keep alive the fire in the fire-pit till the completion of the atonement. Or, if the fire ritual is performed in the sthandila, he may do the 'visarjana' on each day and kindle the fire afresh daily. Having offered the interior bali and exterior bali, he should take three sips of water (acamana) and render his body to be in oneness with the mantra. Having gone to the place where the kumbhas have been arrayed, he should declare the nature and purpose of the ritual undertaken to the Lord who is in the form of Aghora astra and perform the ablution for Lord Siva with the consecrated water contained in the kumbha. He should worship Him with sandal, flowers and such other substances and offer the garlands and other series of paraphernalia up to naivedya. Having entreated the Lord to grant the desired fruits and obtained His gracious permission from Him, he should give the protective bhasma which has formed out of His grace in the fire-pit to the yajamana. Even in this occasion, the recital of the Vedas, Agamas and hymns and the incantation of mantras should be duly performed as done in the ritual of 'santi'.

With regard to another type of 'murti homa', some specific variations of rituals are told now. The Guru should worship Lord Siva in the kumbha placed at the center and Aghora astra in the vardhani kalasa and worship eight Murtis and Murtisvaras in the eight kalasas kept in eight directions around the siva kumbha and vardhani kalasa. With the recital of eight mantras starting from 'sarva', he should perform the fire ritual and offer oblations in the eight directions. With the altar designed at the center, this fire ritual may be performed in eight sthandilas or eight fire-pits. The oblations should be offered with the faggots, clarified butter, sesame, milk and barley(yava). With each of these substances, the oblations should be offered separately for 108, 50 or 25 times.

The faggots to be used in this homa are: palasa, udumbara, asvattha and vata for the fire-pits in the main directions starting from the east. Sami, apamarga, srivruksha and plaksha for the fire-pits in the corner directions starting from the south-east. This homa may be performed without making use of milk and paddy grains, may be performed in five fire-pits and five ghata(pots), eight or five fire-pits or eight or five sthandilas. Or, having designed only one sthandila in the east, all the rituals of homa and oblations may be performed there itself with the recital of all the mantras mentioned above.

The guru should perform the fire-ritual in the fire-pit designed in the east or in the north-east with the recital of samhita mantras. Having offered the ‘purna ahuti’, he should perform the ablution for Siva with the consecrated water contained in the ghata and the kalasas. Having worshipped Him with sandal, flowers and other substances, the Guru should entreat Him for the attainment of the desired fruits. Thus, this muti homa is considered to be of three kinds, in view of the difference as to the foremost, medium and lower.

The other type of murti homa should be done so as to be associated with the worship of Murtisvaras and fire ritual. This should be done during consecration by sprinkling, installation and such other occasions. This is not recommended as the ritual fit for atonement. This should be performed according to the number of days prescribed for ‘santi’ ritual. Since ‘ghruta snana’ (ablution with ghee) related to atonement has been explained already by me, it is not detailed here.

I will explain the process of appeasing the portentous incidents, which process is efficacious in warding off all kinds of misfortunes and distress. The appearance of sun during the night is indicative of the fear that could arise due to the activities of the opponent king. Such portent should be appeased by the performance of the rites of atonement accompanied by the feeding of the brahmins well versed in the Vedas. The appearance of the moon during the newmoon day is indicative of the fact that the country will be ruled over by other king. The rite of atonement should be done as said before, at least in a medium way or inferior way.

The occurrence of earthquake would definitely result in the immediate downfall of the present king. To appease this portent, the Guru should perform abhisheka for Lord Siva with honey, milk and clarified butter, taken in the measure of 1000, 500 or 250 prasthas or 100 or 50 prasthas. This abhisheka should be performed to Lord Siva according to the procedure told for ‘snapana’ for 21 days or 14 or 7 days continuously with clarified butter and honey in the foremost pattern.

Even on the occurrence of shaking of the whole temple complex or of the halls built inside the temple and such other constructions, the rite of atonement should be done in the same way. The jolting of water-sources such as the river, tank, well and such others would result in the famine and poverty of the country. Having constructed a sacrificial pavilion on the bank of the river or tank, the Guru should design a sthandila at its center, place a kumbha and vardhani(kalasa) for Siva and Sakti and arrange eight vessels(ghatas) around them. All these kalasas should be wound around with thread, covered with new cloth and deposited with gold coin or lotus. The Guru should invoke the presence of seven sacred rivers personified as virgins into the kalasas and worship them with sandal, flowers and such other substances and subsequently perform the ‘disa homa’. Upon the completion of the ritual, the Guru should pour down the consecrated water contained in the kalasas into the river or tank. The alleviating ritual should be done in this way for five consecutive days.

If the images installed in the temple appear as weeping or as soaked in sweat, such incidence indicates the impending death of the king and the immediate destruction of all the living beings. On such incidence, the Guru should perform the appeasing rite immediately. Having purified the image, he should perform the foremost kind of ‘santi’ ritual. He should perform the ‘santi homa’ and the feeding of the learned brahmins daily. O, the lords of sages!, then, at the end, he should perform the concerned festival for the image according to the available resources.

If the downpour of blood occurs, such portent indicates the destruction of all things and living beings. The enclosures and the halls of the temple which are stained with blood streaks should be cleaned well. Having besmeared the entire ground with cowdung, the Guru should perform the ritual known as ‘paryagni karana’ (going around the complex with burning effigy representing the evil force) related to ‘vastu’ and declaring the auspiciousness of the day, time and the event (punyaha vacana), he should do ‘snapana abhisheka’ with honey and other recommended substances. He should perform the ‘santi homa’ according to the procedure mentioned for the earthquake. Such ritual should be performed for 7, 14 or 21 days continuously.

The portents such as the downpour of honey, milk, clarified butter and others indicate the immediate occurrence of agitations and disturbances affecting the whole country. The portents such as the downpour of earth-particles, oil, stones, pieces of flesh and others indicate the same agitations and disturbances. The Guru should perform the śnapana-abhisheka for Lord Siva making use of the materials recommended for appeasing the effects of earthquake. Having worshipped Lord Siva in a grand scale and special way associated with plenty of 'naivedya' varieties, he should feed the devotees of Siva. Such rituals should be performed for 7 consecutive days.

If the downpour of earth-particles and others occurs in a widespread area of the country, the Guru should perform the 'abhisheka' for Lord Siva with milk and śnapana. If blood, sweat and others exude from the Linga, installed images, wooden structures and such others, the Guru should worship the Linga, images, wooden structures and others with sandal and other paraphernalia and adorn them with two clothes. He should perform 'dīśa homa' for the sake of all these and at the end he should arrange for the feeding of the devotees of Siva. Such exudation indicates that the country would be terrified by the activities of the groups of enemies. In order to alleviate such terrifying state, this ritual should be done. The Guru should clean Linga and all the images with the water consecrated with astra mantra, worship Vastu Brahma and perform the abhisheka for Lord Siva. These should be done based on the nakṣatra recommended for the 'santi homa'.

If the whole temple collapses accidentally from the bottom to the top, there would occur misfortunes and troubles to the king by such unexpected incidence. The Guru should perform 'murti homa' to alleviate the dreadful effects of the incidence. The 'snapana abhisheka' should be performed daily according to the resources available. This should be done according to the number of days mentioned for the performance of santi homa. Observing the rules prescribed for the 'anukarma' (subsequent and atoning rituals), the temple complex should be rebuilt right from laying the first bricks. If three-fourth, half, quarter or one eighth of the portion of the temple breaks down, all the ruined portions should be set right within 7, 6, 5 or 4 days. All the rites of atonement should be performed by the learned priests who are in contemplative oneness with Siva constantly.

If there occurs dilapidation and damages to the finial and other parts of vimana, the Guru should perform these rituals for one day. If the vestibule and other parts of vimana get chopped, such damages should be set right immediately and perfectly. If there occurs splits and cracks in the temple complex, the ill-effects of such damages should be estimated well according to the east and other directions in which such damages have occurred. For such kind of damages, the rites of atonement have already been told and these should be performed in the same way.

If there occurs breakages and such other damages to the images of the Gods installed inside the precincts of the temple, the Guru should perform the rites of atonement according to the procedure told in the ‘anukarma vidhi’(directions for doing the subsequent activities). If the halls and such other constructions collapse, he should perform the ‘santi homa’ for one day. If the whole temple complex gets displaced to another place along with the Linga and other images, such occurrence indicates the downfall of the king. To alleviate the bad effects, the foremost Guru should worship Lord Siva with sandal and others and perform the foremost kind of ‘santi homa’. It should be followed by the feeding of devotees and the learned brahmins. Having installed another Linga whose measurements should be the same as those of the previous Linga or installed ‘Bana-linga’ and others associated with temple structure, he should perform such rituals. Or, if the previous Linga itself is to be installed associated with the enclosures of the previous temple, these should be done in the previous place itself according to the directions given in the 'anukarma vidhi', retaining the same previous measures of the temple. If the measures of the new temple complex becomes reduced, such installation should be done in the previous place itself. The Linga which has been displaced to another place should be re-installed in the previous complex, either in the north or in the east. Or, in the place to which the Linga has been displaced, another temple may be constructed according the directions given in the 'anukarma vidhi'.

If the specific tree(sthala vruksha) of the temple gets displaced to another place, such displacement indicates the immediate occurrence of the destruction of crops and grains. The Guru should perform the fire-ritual making oblations with the faggots got from the other tree of the same variety as that of the sthala-vruksha. This fire-ritual should be performed for 14 days associated with the feeding of the saiva-devotees. Snapana-abhisheka should be performed daily to the Linga, which may be the self-manifested Linga(svayambhu) near the sthala-vruksha or other type of Linga installed near that tree. This abhisheka should be associated with 'prabhuta-havis'. In the previous place where the sthala-vruksha was there, other tree belonging to the same variety of the displaced tree should be installed.

If the flowers of other variety of tree blossom in the specific tree of the temple or if the fruits of other tree appear in that tree or if the flowers and fruits appear in the tree of the temple before the lapse of three years, alleviating rituals should be performed for 7, 9 or 5 days continuously. The Guru should perform 'santi-homa' at the bottom of that tree, daily.

If heat and other contrary signs such as bubbles and others appear in the Linga, images or in the pedestals, such appearance indicates that the human beings would certainly die being severely affected by fever. The Guru should perform the ablution for Siva with sandal-water, coconut-water and such others contained in the kalasas arranged in a particular pattern as explained in the chapter on 'snapana-abhisheka'. Such ablution should be done associated with panca-amruta. Or, he may perform the ablution for Siva with milk, honey and clarified butter, each one with a measure of one prastha. The measure of these items may be from 1000 adhakas at the maximum level to 4 adhakas at the minimum level. Having besmeared the Linga and the images profusely with paste of perfumes associated with sandal, agaru, karpura, usira and kumkuma, the Guru should worship the Linga and others with flowers and other substances collected in a large scale. He should perform the 'disa-homa' until the heat dissipates. The devotees who are desirous of complete atoned state should make arrangement for the performance of 'cool-pot' abhisheka.

If the human beings, deers, sheep, other animals, birds and snakes give birth to those which do not belong to their own class, there would erupt much adverse effects such as quarrels, clashes between various groups of people and disruptive activities in the world. O, the twice-born sages!, if horses are born, their body being associated with many heads, many legs and many noses, associated with colors other than their own natural color, associated with deformed eyebrows and such other defects and not associated with their own specific color, such horses and other animals should be abandoned and driven away immediately and the Guru should perform the expiatory rites. Having worshipped Lord Siva according to the prescribed procedure, he should perform 'disa-homa'. Having honoured the devotees of Siva according to the prescribed procedure, he should perform 'santi-homa'. Then he should arrange for the feeding of the devotees of Siva. These rituals should be done continuously for 7 or 5 days.

When the rites of atonement are to be done for the cows, elephants and horses, the Guru should perform the ‘vastu homa’ , ‘vastu bali’ and santi homa associated with the worship of Kshetresvara. When the mountains seem to be dashing against each other as if they are fighting, the whole contry would be subjected to the fear of war. To ward off such fear, the Guru should worship Lord Siva according to the prescribed manner , perform the ‘disa-homa’ and do the ablution for Paramesvara. Such rituals should be done for 9 or 7 days continuously. Similarly, if drops of sweating appear in the Linga, images or in the pedestal, the country would become afflicted with fear(due to some unknown causes). Having sprinkled the water consecrated with astra mantra over the Linga and others, the Guru should perform ‘santi homa’ for 7 days continuously.

If the Linga, images, vimana, halls(mantapas) , gopura or other such structures, shrines situated in the enclosures, enclosures, assembly-hall(asthana mantapa) and stages are struck by the lightning, such occurrence indicates that the king would be afflicted with severe diseases. The Guru should perform the santi-homa in nine different ways in an orderly way according to the procedure set forth for such performance. This procedure is applicable to the Linga, pedestal or the images. Then, having done the ‘disa-homa’ accompanied by the ‘maha snapana’, he should arrange 108 kalasas in one of the specified patterns and fill them up with panca-amruta, panca-gavya, honey, milk and clarified butter, each substance with a measure of 1000 prasthas to 4 prasthas, and perform abisheka for the Great Lord and worship Him in the specified order. Having performed the ‘santi-homa’, he should feed the learned brahmins. Having performed such rituals for 7 days continuously, he should arrange for the festival of the Lord.

O, lords of the sages!, if all portions of the temple complex become damaged and destructed, the alleviating rituals should be done as explained before. If the whole temple complex collapses to the ground unexpectedly, what has been told already for such occurrence should be performed. O, the first-born Adisaiva sages!, in the case of pavilions and halls, the expiatory rituals should be done in the same way. The Guru should arrange for the feeding of the Saivas who are experts in the Saiva Sastras. Such feeding should be done daily.

All the rites of atonement prescribed for the temple are applicable to the royal palace of the king. If heavy lightning strikes the temple-tree, asvattha tree and other such divine trees fit for sacrificial rituals, the santi-homa should be performed in front of the fallen tree for 7 days continuously. Having done this, the Guru should implant the sapling of the same kind of tree in the same place or in the adjacent place.

When house, well, tank or the river is hit by the lightning, santi-homa should be performed for one day. If the elephant becomes rutting, there would occur decay to the animals which are being used as mounts. Santi-homa should be performed in the elephant shed for 7 days continuously. When stormy winds hit the country, the whole country would be troubled by violent clashes and struggles. Santi-homa should be performed for 5 or 3 days or for one day.

If excessive smoke issues out of the sacrificial fire, it would instill a frightened state in the mind of the main person who has arranged for the fire-ritual. The Guru should sprinkle the drops of pancagavya over the fire, dig the ground below the fire-pit, fill it up with pure earth and besmear the mixture of five kinds of earth over it. Having performed ‘punyaha-vacana’ and sprinkling, he should feed the learned brahmins. The santi-homa should be performed there in nine different patterns. When the rising of smoke is observed in the pedestal of Linga or other images, same rituals should be performed. Then he should perform the ablution for the Lord with milk taken in the measure of 1000 prasthas, 500, 250 or 108 prasthas. At the end, he should perform the ablution with cool-pot(sita kumbha).

If the color of the Linga, images and the pedestals gets changed into some other different color, such change indicates that the king would be afflicted with diseases. The Guru should sprinkle the consecrated water over them and sprinkle the water mixed with flour, earth, bilva leaves, darbhās, turmeric powder and myrobalan. Santi-homa should be done in the foremost, medium or lower kind. Having prepared a mixture of perfumes with sandal, usira, karpura, kumkuma and agaru in a great measure, he should besmear the paste of perfumes over the Linga and others with love and devotion. Having worshipped them with sandal, flowers and other substances, he should pray for the complete removal of the defects. On each day, he should feed the saiva-devotees and the common brahmins.

If the bheri(bigger drum) and other such instruments raise their sounds, of their own accord(without being beaten), ‘mahamari’(severe variety of epidemic striking simulataneously in a larger scale) would spread over the country. Having sprinkled the water consecrated with astra-mantra over the bheri and other instruments and worshipped Lord Siva, the Guru should perform the ‘santi-homa’, its variety being as desired by him. In a country where the appearance of mock-sun and that of the mock-moon is seen, that country would be subjected to the rule of another king. Santi-homa should be performed, its duration being from 9 days to one day, as desired by the Guru.

If rainbow is seen during the night, the country would be terrified by the groups of enemies. Except the planets such as Venus and others, if the stars become visible during the daytime, the country would be affected by the failure of seasonal downpour of rain. If the planets and stars are seen as if they are falling down, destruction would occur to the animals which are used as mounts and used to pull on the carts. To alleviate the bad effects, the Guru should perform the santi-homa for 9 nights to one night, according to the resources available. If agni-nakshatra is seen to be falling down, the Guru should do the incantation of aghora-mantra for 300 times.

If the lightning strikes daily for more than 6 days continuously, misfortunes would occur to the king. In order to alleviate the bad effects, ‘disa homa’ should be performed for 7 or 5 days or according to the number of days on which the lightning has struck. If the lightning strikes for 7 days continuously, the Guru should perform snapana-abhisheka with milk and other substances, to ward off the ill-effects. If the sun or moon is seen surrounded by a halo for more than 5 days, the king of that region would be overpowered by the enemies. The Guru should perform the santi-homa in a special way, suitable to the foremost, medium or inferior kind, as desired by him.

If conflagration occurs in some directions, the country would be afflicted with famine and scarcity of foods. At that time the Guru should perform ablution for Siva with milk according to the procedure explained for snapana-abhisheka. At the end of this, he should perform the santi-homa. He should continue these rituals for 5 days. If the color of the sandal, flowers and other substances offered to Lord Siva gets altered, the people of all castes would be afflicted with severe epidemic known as 'masuri'. Having worshipped Lord Siva according to the procedure mentioned for that, the Guru should perform 'disa homa' for 5 or 3 days and at the end he should offer 'prabhuta havis'.

If the bodhi-tree which happens to be the temple-tree falls down with its roots unexpectedly, such incidence indicates that the king would be afflicted with diseases leading to his death. Having worshipped Lord Siva according to the procedure set forth in the Agama, the Guru should perform the rites of atonement in the foremost scale. He should perform the santi-homa in the direction in which the tree has fallen and implant the sapling of the same kind of tree in that place or in the adjacent place. If some branches of the bodhi-tree(temple tree) break and fall down unexpectedly, clashes and struggles would erupt in the country. Santi-homa should be performed either in the foremost scale, medium scale or in the inferior scale. This may be continued for 14, 9, 7, 5 or 3 days . O, the first-born sages!, such santi-homa may be continued for 45 days. Same rituals should be performed, even if other principal trees of the temple or their branches fall down unexpectedly.

If the swarm of locusts and grass-hoppers get originated, famine and scarcity would affect the country. To alleviate the bad effects, murti-homa should be performed for 21 days continuously followed by the feeding of the saiva-devotees. If men or women, short-tailed animals, long-tailed animals, birds or crawling animals become insane, disa-homa should be performed for 7 or 3 days continuously. On the occurrence of the sudden death of elephants and horses, such homa should be performed for 3 days. If excessive and untimely downpour of heavy rains occurs, the country would be affected by famine and scarcity of grains. The Guru should perform 'abhisheka' for Siva with flour of rice and turmeric powder, their measure being 1000, 500, 250, 100, 50 or 25 prasthas according to the procedure mentioned for snapana-abhisheka. Having grounded the turmeric pieces well and mixed it with camphor, the Guru should apply this paste around the pedestal of the Linga or around the image to a thickness of 6,4 or 3 matras. He should arrange in an orderly way many lamps lighted with the wicks soaked in agaru and karpura. Then he should offer the ‘mudga anna’ as naivedya and perform the santi-homa. In this way, he should continue these rituals for 7, 5 or 3 days.

If death occurs unexpectedly to the chief queen of the king, principal horse, principal elephant, personal Guru of the king or the royal priest(purohita), the king would be affected with constant fear of death. Having worshiped Siva, the Supreme Lord of all Gods, the Acharya should perform the santi-homa for 7 days. On the occurrence of the death of the elephant and the horse, santi homa should be performed for 5 or 3 days. Having consecrated the water kept in the kalasa with the incantation of Mrutyunjaya mantra for 1008 times, the Acharya should sprinkle that consecrated water over the head of the king, reciting the Mrutyunjaya mantra. To accomplish longevity to the king, he should mix the remaining consecrated water with the water kept for the king's bath and drinking. Daily, the Acharya should offer the burnt darbhas(homa raksha) conceiving it as born of the Grace of Lord Siva. The sacred Bhasma should be offered to the king by the Acharyas who have completely mastered the Scriptures of Saiva Siddhanta.

The learned king should invite another Guru or purohita to take charge of the respective duty within seven days; should have a queen; should have a principal royal elephant and the principal royal horse within 7 days, since Guru and others belong to the intimate retinue of the king.

If the dogs enter the temple precincts and enclosures and climb over the pavilions, gopura, shrines of the retinue Deities or over the palace of the king, houses, malika-constructions and such others and raise their cries or if the cats and such other animals climb over such constructions and raise their cries, the people residing in the surrounding area would be impelled to move out of their own place and to settle in some other inconvenient place. To alleviate such bad effects, those who are maintaining the temple should catch such animals and leave them in a distant place. The Guru should perform the 'punyaha vacana' and do the santi-homa suitable to one of the three modes – foremost, medium and inferior – as desired by him under such context as climbing and crying. If the cats raise their cries, the Guru should perform santi-homa or do the incantation of aghora mantra. If jackal climbs over such constructions, the Guru should perform the santi-homa in a special way for one day.

If fire breaks out in the horse-shed, santi-homa should be performed for 7 days. If fireflies are seen swarming over the Linga, images, pedestals and such others, such vision indicates that the king, queen or other officials would be inflicted with diseases. Particularly, if they are seen swarming over the Linga, such incidence would lead to misfortunes for the king. Having destroyed such insects, the Guru should do abhisheka for all these and perform the santi-homa. Snapana-abhisheka should be performed for Lord Siva for one day or three days. If they are seen swarming over the body of the king and men or women, the Guru may do the incantation of aghora mantra.

If multitudes of insects or bees appear at the bottom of the Linga, pedestal or image or in the main shrine or in the shrines of retinue Deities, the country would be troubled by clashes and fightings. In order to alleviate the defects, the Guru should purify that place and make the Linga and other images to be firm and steady by applying the eightfold bond(ashta bandhana). Having performed 'punyaha vacana', he should do the santi-homa according to the situation, suitable to the foremost, medium or inferior kind.

If the doors of the main shrine get opened or closed of their own accord, lot of confusing and violent activities would affect the normal life of the country. On such incidence, santi homa should be performed for 7 days. If flags in various designs and forms are seen moving through the sky and if luminous spots appear in the sky in white or red color having the brightness of a star after the sunset or before the sunrise, or if a long-tailed falling star is seen in the sky, the country would be much disturbed by tumultuous incidents and quarrels. The Guru should perform the santi-homa in the foremost, medium or inferior scale, as ascertained by him according to the resources.

I will now explain the procedure for doing the subsequent and related activities concerned with different structures, designs and all other rituals of the temple. This procedure belongs to the ancient tradition and is kept alive through the ages without any interruption. If the temple complex collapse or gets damaged, if the entrance of the temple becomes decayed or ruined, if its original direction gets altered, if there occurs defects and reductions in the existing members and measures of 'jati' and other types of constructions, if the measures of their perimeter and interspace get reduced, all the parts of the temple should be reconstructed immediately using the same materials as used for the original temple, applying the same proportionate measures of that temple. Whatever be the construction, the proportionated measures given to it should be maintained very accurately when it is to be reconstructed.

The base and other parts of the temple are to be associated with accurate proportionate measures. The temple in which the base and such other important parts have been built without proportionate measures is bereft of any characteristic lineament and feature. Therefore, the base and such other parts should be redesigned so as to be with accurate measures. While renovating the temple of svayambhu-linga, the design and measures of the temple should be retained in tact. The same measures should be applied while reconstructing that temple. Or, that temple may be renovated according to the directions given in the Agamas. No defect is there, in such Agama-based reconstruction. Or, the outer parts of the temple may be fully built with stones and the inner parts, with bricks. In the temple built by the human being, various parts of the temple such as the square four-pillared hall, cage-like niche, elongated four pillared hall and others should be well measured, ensuring the exact application of accurate measurements. The shrines which are not in accurate and recommended locations within the temple should be rebuilt so as to be in accurate locations and to be with specific features.

dvāram pūrvavadiṣṭam syāt paścimadvārameva vā 	9

While renovating, the nagara type of building should be rebuilt in the nagara type only; vesara type of building should be reconstructed to be in the vesara type only. Similarly, with regard to dravida type of building also, it should be redesigned so as to be in darvida type only. Even for varata and other types of building, the same type should be maintained, while renovating. The solid structures should be rebuilt so as to be in solid category and the hallow building to be in hallow category. The building which has become dilapidated and ruined should be rebuilt in another place in an appropriate direction and such new building may be constructed either in the east or in the north of the ruined building. If the entrance has been provided in any one of intermediary direction for the previous building, the same direction should be maintained or the entrance may be provided in the west for the new building.

नष्टे संस्थापयेद्गर्भं तथा चाद्येष्टकामपि।

naṣṭe saṁsthāpayedgarbhaṁ tathā cādyeṣṭakāmapī
nāsikādyāṅgaḥīne tu punastadvat samācaret 	10
apramāṇe'nyathā ceddhi sapramāṇaṁ yathā nayet
susthitaṁ dusthitaṁ vāpi śivaliṅgaṁ na cālayet 	11
jīrṇādi doṣa saṁyuktaṁ pūjāyuktaṁ tu susthitaṁ
jīrṇādi doṣarahitaṁ pūjāhīnaṁ tu duḥsthitam 	12

If the main shrine has collapsed, it should be rebuilt immediately. If the first-brick which was deposited at the beginning of the construction of the existing temple has become crushed, it should be replaced. If essential parts of the vimana such as the vestibule and others have become damaged, such parts should be rebuilt. All those parts which have been built previously without proportionated measures should be rebuilt so as to be with proportionate measures. Whether the temple is in a properly maintained state or is in a bad condition lacking in maintenance, the Sivalinga should never be displaced. A temple associated with defects such as the ruined state, dilapidated state and such others, it is considered to be in good condition, if the daily worship is being performed. A temple which is perfect, being free from the mentioned defects is considered to be in bad condition, if the daily worship is not performed.

jīrṇādyam pūjitaṁ hanti nihanti tadapūjitaṁ 	13
tasmātsamuddharejjīrṇam yathāśāstraṁ sukhāya ca

If renovation has been perfectly done, the main person who has undertaken such renovation gets the exalted and the highest fruit comparable to the coronation. If worship is done in a temple impaired with decay and other defects, that would lead to whole destruction. If worship is not properly performed in that temple, that would lead to annihilation. In either way, the decayed temple leads to misfortunes. So, the decayed temple should be renovated according to the directions set forth in the Agamas for the goodness and welfare of the society.

tyājyāni sarvathaitāni liṅgāni ṣoḍaśaiva tat 	16

The linga or image which has become decayed, burnt, thinned, thickened and massive, reduced in measure, increased in measure, broken, scratched, unevenly shaped, bereft of characteristic lineaments, which is with forked hands, whose parts are joined, whose parts have become mutilated, which has been used for malevolent effects, has been made of stone associated with the defect of ‘garbha’ (cavity containing some small living beings), which is with deformed parts or in which some parts are missing – all these sixteen kinds of defective lingas should be abandoned by all means.

tathaiva sthāpanīyāni yadyetānyavraṇāni hi 	19

The pedestal, the square base(brahma sila) or the Bull – if these are in decayed condition, these should be abandoned. The linga with excessive height, with much decreased height, the linga for which the direction faced by it seems to be confusing, the linga installed in a defective place, the linga which is shaky or which has been rendered to be shaky, the linga which has broken and fallen to the ground or which has been made to fall down to the ground, the linga installed by ignorant person, linga installed with the recital of mantras other than the Agamic mantras or the mantras of other system, linga which has been made with the stone abandoned already by the sculptor – all these are not to be considered as duly installed. Only those lingas which are bereft of scars and scratches should be installed.

śatadaṇḍāntare sthāpyaṁ jalabādhā samanvitaṁ
sahasra karmukhāntaṁ vā sthāpayellīṅgamādarāt 	23

If the linga installed by asuras, sages, Devas and knowers of tattvas has become decayed or broken, it should not be displaced and re-installed even according to the rules. But, due to the fear of being taken away by the king or stolen by a thief or burnt by fire, that linga may be installed in another place. The linga which has been carried away to a distant place by the flowing water or which has been seized by thief or enemy becomes purified by the incantation of mula mantra for 50,000 times and there is nothing wrong in re-installing it. It should be re-installed in another place so as to face the direction towards which it was facing earlier. The linga which has been affected by the water should be re-installed with devotion, beyond 100 dandas or 1000 bows.

pakṣmabhrūvāsyarekhādi hīne tu parivarjayet
aṅgaḥīne tu tattyājyaṁ ityatra na vicāraṇā 	25

These directions are common to the images(whose limbs are fully manifest). If an image is seen associated with many defects, another image should be installed. If the images made of stone, well suitable clay , wood and gems are deprived of the eyebrows, eyelids, and embellishing lines of the face, they should be abandoned. The image which is with mutilated limbs should be abandoned. There is no dispute in this regard.

uttamāṅga vihīne tu tayaktvānyadyojayennavam
padbāhuhīne tyājyaṁ vā sandhānaṁ vā samācaret 	27

If the images made of metal and suitable clay are bereft of ornaments of the hands and nose, bereft of ears, teeth and such other members, these missing parts and ornaments should be made with the same kind of material as used for the image and should be glued firmly. If the head of an image is missing, that image should be abandoned and another image should be made afresh with the same material. If the feet and shoulders are missing in an image, that image may be abandoned or the missing limbs may be suitably designed and joined firmly with the image.

The parts of the main frame of an image are classified into three – upanga(major limbs), anga(main limb) pratyanga(minor limbs). The main limb(anga) is the principal wooden stake(pradhana sula). It is also called ‘brahma danda’. The wooden frames joined with the sula at the torso, hip, shoulder, fore arms, thigh, knee and shank are called upangas(major limbs). All other frames not associated with the main stake are known as pratyngas(minor limbs). This is the classification known well to the wise sculptors. If the brahma danda is missing in an image, the work should be commenced with the designing of the sula. If the pratyangas and the upangas are missing, they should be made afresh and joined firmly with the image.

If the brahma danda which has been already fixed is associated with all characteristic lineaments, the same brahma danda could be fixed for the image to be made afresh, without making a new brhama danda. But, if damages and splits are seen in the existing brahma danda, a new brahma danda should be designed retaining the previous measures. The mutilated images made of stone and suitable clay should be dropped into the water contained in a very deep pit or pond. The mutilated images made of gems should be abandoned or may be used for making other images with gems. The mutilated images made of wood may be thrown into the fire, may be buried under the ground or thrown into the water. The mutilated images made of metal should be melt and liquefied and used for making other metal images.

The prapa(a curved elongated structure enclosing the image) and the pedestal of the image to be abandoned may be used for the newly made image or used for another image. If the image which is in good condition has not been duly installed earlier , those prapa and the pedestal may be used for that uninstalled image. Or, they may be used for making the image of another Deity. O, the foremost sages!, if the pedestal, brahmasila and the Bull are associated with all lineaments, they may be used for another image under all circumstances or may be abandoned.

The damaged pedestal made of stone should be redesigned so as to be free from any defect and it should be joined with the image made of stone only. If the pedestal made of stone is not available for the existing stone-image, it may be made of bricks for the time being and joined with the stone-image. Then, another pedestal should be made with stone so as to be in the same form and measure of the existing brick-pedestal and joined with the image.

The square pedestal should not be replaced by a circular pedestal. Similarly, the circular pedestal should not be replaced by a square pedestal. The directions for performing the subsequent activities related to mantapa, retinue Deities and the shrines of the retinue Deities are the same as explained before and all such activities should be done according to those directions. While renovating, the form and measurements of the antar mandala(first enclosure) and other enclosures should be maintained to be in the previous form and measurements.

Any increase or decrease in the existing measurements of the palace or of the forts and such other constructions would yield misfortunes and calamities to the king. If the constructions associated with embellishments have been built with accurate measurements according to the Silpa sastras and Agama sastras, the same measurements should be retained while repairing them. The constructions for which the system of proportionate measurements has not been applied may be repaired by increasing or decreasing the existing measures. There is nothing wrong in such renovation. The existing measurement of a building may be increased towards east or north. Such increase is highly recommended in the Sastras. But the measurement should not be increased towards west. If increased in the west, the owner of the building would be ruined by the enemies. If increased in the south, it would lead to untimely death of the owner. Therefore, increasing the length or breadth in the south side is not recommended in the Sastras. Even extension in all directions around the building evenly or unevenly is not recommended. All the subsequent activities related to gopura also should be done as prescribed for the temple complex.

sarvathā nocitaṁ hīnaṁ kuryāduktakrameṇa tu

O, the lords of the sages!, especially with regard to the village and such other settlements, houses, mansions and such others, sala-type of constructions(series of premises within one complex), decrease either in the previous breadth or in the previous length is not recommended. While redesigning, either the length and breadth may be equal to the previous measures or they may be greater than the previous measures. The length and the breadth may be increased on either sides, either in the east or in the north as suitable to the needs after analysing the pros and cons. For the houses and the malika-type of constructions, the measurements should be adjusted according to the number of the upper floors. By all means, decrease in the existing measures is not agreeable. Increase in the existing measures should be done according to the procedure explained before.

For all the constructions and images mentioned above, some specific directions are now given. If renovation is carried out making use of the materials which are superior to those used for the construction earlier, the previous measurements may be decreased if needed or they may be retained as they are. If the roof of the main shrine and others has collapsed down to the level of the image installed on a pedestal, the Guru should withdraw the mantras from the image and invoke them in a structure designed in the form of sword and take another image to be installed there. He should worship daily the previous Deity invoked in the sword and such other structures, or in the purna-kalasa or in the pedestal. Or, he may install another image of the same kind, preceded by the disposal of the previous image done according to the procedure mentioned for that. He should take care to see that the features of the form, proportionate measures, material of the previous image are maintained throughout in making the new image.

Now I will instruct the directions for the performance of consecration which is efficacious in nullifying all the defects. Avarta, Anavarta, Punaravartana, Antarika – these are the four kinds of consecration. Taking the image installed in the original miniature temple and installing it in the main shrine of the newly built temple is considered to be ‘Avarta’. Re-installing the image touched by wicked and immoral person, criminal, outcast and a person born of the lowest caste, the image for which the daily worship has not taken place for more than one month, the image which has been dislocated during some activities carried out in adjacent enclosures of the temple, re-installing the Linga when the Linga and the pedestal become shaky – is considered to be ‘Anavarta’. Having taken out the image from the main shrine and installing it again in a miniature temple and re-installing that image in the main shrine (having taken out from the miniature temple after the completion of renovation) - is considered to be ‘Punaravartana’.

O, the twice-born sages!, the 'avarta' consecration is associated with 'yatra dana homa'. For all other types consecration, the 'yatra dana homa' need not be performed. In the 'avarta' type of consecration, the suitable and auspicious month, half-month(paksha), nakshatra and other factors should be duly ascertained only in the way as told in the chapter dealing with the installation of Sivalinga. O, the sages of austere vows and observances!, all other types of consecration could be performed without analysing the suitability of time for 'tirtha' and analysing the suitability of nakshatra, week, amsa and such other factors.

anāvartamiti jñeyam punarāvartanam tviha
sarvamāvartavatkuryāt kiṃ tu mūladvayānvitam 	12

The ‘anavarta’ type consecration should be performed like the ‘avarta’ without looking into various factors mentioned above. Rituals such as making the characteristic marks and lines over the image (lakshanaoddhara), keeping the image in water(toya adhivasa), keeping the image on the bed(sayana adhivasa) should be inevitably performed in the ‘anavarta’ type of consecration. Now, listen to the performance of ‘punaravartana’. All the rituals to be performed in the ‘avarta’ should be done in the ‘punaravartana’ also. But, the difference is that the ‘punaravartana’ is associated with two main shrines(main miniature temple and the main shrine of the temple).

O, the learned sages!, then I will instruct briefly the procedure for the performance of ‘antarita’ consecration. The rituals related to the installation of images such as fixing the gems(ratna nyasa), opening of the eyes(akshi moksha), keeping the image in the water(jala adhivasana), keeping the image on the bed(sayana adhivasana) may be left out undone, in the case of ‘antarita’. Having covered the image completely including all the limbs with a new cloth, the Acharya should array the kumbhas and perform the fire ritual according to the directions given earlier for such rituals and at the end, he should perform snapana-abhisheka. All other rituals are common, as usual. The person who sponsors for the performance of such consecration gets elevated to a higher state to be attained through virtuous deeds.

Then, the directions for performing the rituals for the disposal of the deformed images and for the installation of new images are told. For the performance of such rituals, suitable pavilion should be erected either in front of the shrine, south side or north-east side of shrine. The pavilion should be associated with an east-entrance furnished with a single arch. The pavilion should be beautified with all kinds of decoration and with rows of darbhas and such other decorating materials.

Even here, worship of the entrance and other related rituals should be performed. Worship of Lord Siva should be done in a raised platform(sthandila). Having performed the rite of 'mantra tarpana' in the fire kindled in the duly designed fire-pit, the foremost Acharya should offer the oblations with the faggots, clarified butter, sesame and with duly prepared 'havis' and offer the 'balis' for Vastu Brahma and for the interior Deities and Directional Deities. Then, having done 'acamana', he should perform 'sakalīkaraṇa' and arrange for the feeding of the devotees who are adorned with 'siva-ornaments' such as the three stripes of bhasma and rudraksha beads.

"In order to set right the defects concerned with the deformed images, appeasing rituals(santi) should be done - this is the direction given by You earlier. For the purpose of the removal of the present defects, Lord Sadasiva has assumed my form." Having informed the purpose of the proposed ritual to the Lord in this way, the Acharya should perform the 'santi homa'.

Having offered the oblations of milk, clarified butter, honey and durva-grass for 1008 times with the recital of mula -mantra of Lord Siva, the Guru who is proficient in the proper application of mantras should bathe the image reciting the hrudaya-mantra and worship it with all the essential paraphernalia. "Om Vyapakesvaraya Namah" - this is the mula-mantra to be recited in this specific ritual. Then, for the hrudaya mantra and other anga-mantras, he should recite the following mantras: Om Vyapakesvaraya hrudayaya namah', 'Om Vyapakesvaraya sirese namah', 'Om Vyapakesvaraya sikhayai namah', 'Om

Vyapakesvaraya kavacaya namah', 'Om Vyapakesvaraya astraya namah' . The seed letters(normally used for the mula-mantra of Siva) need not be added with these mantras. The Guru should worship the Lord contemplating Him as seated on the 'pranava-seat' visualized at the center of the sthandila. He should worship Him with sandal, flowers, garlands and such other materials.

Then, the Guru should appeal to the indefinable power which has occupied that image(and deformed it), reciting the astra-mantra: "Having occupied this image, some indefinable power exists here. Let this indefinable power leave out of this image as per the order issued by Lord Siva and let it go to some other place as desired by it. And let Lord Sambhu be present here in this image associated with Vidyas and Vidyasvaras." Having uttered in this way, the Guru should offer the 'paranmukha-arghya'(arghya water to be offered to send off the Deity) with the recital of the great astra-mantra. Then, having invoked the Lord to come out of the image, the Guru should install Him in the Kumbha.

In front of the 'sthandila' in which the Lord has been invoked, the Guru should place 'Siva kumbha' adorned with a new cloth, deposited with gold coin and furnished with a bunch of darbhas(kurca), lid and tender leaves(of mango tree) and wound around with thread. He should place a kalasa(vardhani) associated with the same features as those of Siva-kumbha by the side of Siva-kumbha. Having duly worshipped these two kalasas, the Guru should keep them safely.

The worship for the kumbhas should be done daily, followed by 'santi homa'. Then, having offered oblations for 1000 times for the sake of each part of the deformed image, the Guru should sprinkle the consecrated water contained in the santi-kumbha over the image and do the incantation of the mantra pertaining to the Deity, touching the image with darbhas. Having offered the 'paranmukha arghya', he should send off the Tattvas, Tattvesvaras, Murtis and Murtisvaras who are present in the pedestal and other parts of the image. Making use of the rope made of gold, silver or other material, he should displace the image slowly and carefully, reciting the 'vrushabha' mantra. "Let all auspiciousness be taken hold of by the world" - uttering these words, the Guru should gently drop the deformed image into the river water.

Having offered oblations for the attainment of plenitude, the Guru should offer the oblations for the contentment of the Directional Deities and for the purity of the 'vastu' aspect of the temple complex. All these homas should be done for 100 times. Then, he should ensure the protection and safety of the temple complex through the worship of Maha Pasupata Astra and the incantation of Pasupata Astra mantra. After this, the supreme Acharya should install another image (in place of the disposed image), having made it to be in the same measurements as those of the disposed image.

With regard to the installation of alternate image(bala linga), there is no need for the placing and worship of ghata(vessel) in the case of svayambhu linga, daiva linga, arsha linga, ganapa linga, loha linga(image made of metal) and the lingas which appear in the river water. The placing of ghata is essentially enjoined for the lingas installed by human beings. Such ghata-worship should be performed continuously for seven days, fifteen days or one month. If the duration of the worship of ghata exceeds one month, then the worship would become defective and the concerned Deity of the image would yield inauspicious effects. Therefore, with all efforts, the Guru should install the bala-linga in the prescribed way before the end of one month or before the last day of the month and invoke the presence of the mantra-form of the concerned Deity in that bala-linga.

mūlaliṅgam na labdham ceddeśakālānurodhataḥ 	27
ṣaṭtrimśadabdaparyante mūlaliṅge niveśayet

Within the period between one month and twelve years, the Guru should take out the power of the mantra-form of the Deity from the bala-linga and install it in the mula-linga. If proper material is not available for making the new linga due to the factors of place and time, the Guru should re-unite the power with the existing mula-linga.

ṣaṭtriṁśadvatsarordhvaṁ tu mūlasthānaṁ tadeva hi
tatrasthaṁ bālaliṅgādyam tyaktvā mūlaṁ tu vinyaset 	30

According to the direction given for the installation of bala-linga, the daily homas , fortnight homas and others should be performed. The number of homas should be increased twice or thrice each day. The foremost Guru should offer the oblations for twice the number of previous homas, if the installation of Mula-linga is to be done in the 24th year. Beyond the duration of 36 years, if mula-linga is not installed, the existing bala-linga itself becomes the mula-linga. Having removed the items related to the bala-linga, the Guru should invoke the presence of mula-linga there.

These directions are to be observed even for the 'sakala'(imgae with fully manifest limbs and parts) type of images. But,there are some specific rules to be observed here.The power invoked in the alternate image should be shifted and re-installed in the newly made image within 12 years. If not done in this way , the main image should be installed in the same place itself where the alternate image has been installed. O, the foremost twice-born sages!, these are the rules declared here for the reconstruction of shrines and temples. Or, alternely,the Guru may make use of sword for the sake of alternate image and invoke the presence of the concerned Deity in that sword and the mantras pertaining to it and may commence the rituals related to re-installation. The Guru should re-install the retinue Deities who have been invoked to be present in the ghatas, in the same way.

Those images such as Sivalinga and others consecrated and installed by those who are ignorant of the Agamic rules, by daivajnas(a class of Visvakarmas), Silpins and others and by those who have not been duly initiated into Siva-worship should again be purified through the prescribed sacramental rites by the Guru as detailed earlier. Similarly, even the images installed according to the systems other than the system of Saiva Siddhanta, such as Pasupata and other systems, should again be purified through the relevant sacramental rites by the Guru. Only then, he should worship them.

With regard to the systems other than Saiva Siddhanta, the first one is Pasupata; Soma Siddhanta is the next; and the third one is Lakula. Each of these three systems is classified into three, as Vama, Dakshina and Siddhanta. In this way, there are nine different systems. The Saiva system which is strongly rooted in the mantras and the tantras is differentiated into four - Garuda, Bhairava, Vama and Bhuta Tantra. As told before, each of these systems is differentiated into three categories - Vama, Dakshina and Siddhanta. Adi Saivas are entitled to worship even the lingas installed according to these systems.

The other system known as Yamala is said to be of mixed category. It is also differentiated into three categories - Vama, Dakshina and Siddhanta. The lingas installed according to the Vama system become fit to be worshipped by the Para-saivas. Those installed according to the Dakshina system become fit to be worshipped by the Bhairavas. Those installed according to the Siddhanta and the Yamala are fit to be worshipped by the Adi Saivas. It has been declared that all those images installed according to the systems other than the Siddhanta belong to the 'Raudra'(harsh or terrific) category.

There are many systems differentiated into many categories such as Vama, Dakshina, Misra and others. There are other systems such as Laukika, Vaidika, Adhyatmaka, Atimargaka, Pasupata, Soma Siddhanta, Lakula, Garuda, Vama, Bhairava, Bhuta Tantra, Yamala, Kapala, Pancharatra, Bauddha, Arhata, Bruhaspati Mata, Sankhya, Yoga, Vaikhanasa, Vedanta, Mimamsa, Pauranika, Dharma Sastraka, Vastu Sastra, Sautra, Shadanga, Itihasa, Four Vedas and so on. All those images installed according to these systems are considered to be of 'Raudra' category. The images installed according the system of Siddhanta are considered to be of 'Saumya'(benign) category.

All those images of Vishnu and other Gods which have been installed according to the 'Raudra' procedure should be retrieved and re-installed according to the Saiva procedure. The Adi Saivas should worship all such re-installed images. If Lingas and other images of various Gods which have been installed and which are being worshipped by the Adi saivas are worshipped by those who belong to the 'Raudra' category, such violated worship would result in the destruction of the kingdom and the king; such improper worship would destroy the village and all the inhabitants of that village. There is no doubt about this.

If those images which were installed by the adherents of the 'Raudra' systems and which have been re-installed by the Adi Saivas, are again forcibly made to be worshipped by the followers of the 'Raudra' systems, then such worship would destroy the commander of the army along with his troops; destroy the close associates of the king, ministers, brahmins, kahatriyas, vaisyas, sudras and those born in the lowest and mixed castes. Therefore, the king should immediately prevent such improper activities with all efforts. If such images are once again made to be worshipped by the Adi Saivas, then such worship would always yield victory, longevity and all the benefits to the king. Since the mantras of the Siava system are benign and auspicious, it is considered that they are of the nature of yielding auspicious fruits to all the beings of the world.

The lingas and the images meant for yielding malevolent effects which were installed by the followers of the 'Raudra' systems and in which magical spells have been stored should be set right properly to nullify the inauspicious nature of those lingas and the images. I will give the details for the removal of such images. O, the foremost twice-born sages!, listen to these instructions. Having entered into the shrine where such images have been installed, the Guru should remove vessels made of clay from that place. The utensils made of stone, metal and wood should be repeatedly cleaned well by him. He should plaster the walls of the shrine and besmear the ground with cow-dung mixed with cow-urine. Then, having performed 'punyaha'(declaration of auspicious time and purpose), the Guru should perform the 'vastu homa'.

Having done the ritual known as 'paryagnikarana'(coming around the complex with the burning effigy which represents the defiled nature of the place), the Guru should once again perform the 'punayaha'. Then, he should sprinkle the arghya water with the recital of astra-mantra over the ground and clean it with the cow-dung. The Guru who is the knower of all mantras should withdraw all those mantras employed by the adherents of 'Raudra' systems during the course of activities from 'karshana'(ploughin the land) to 'pratishtha' (installation). He should do such withdrawal by reciting the mantra of 'Mahapasupata'. Then, applying the force of 'mahajala' mantra, he should take out all the mantras from the linga. "Om hum haam ham haam hum"- this is known as 'mahajala' mantra. Reciting this mantra with the accompaniment of 'jaala mudra', the Guru should take out all the inauspicious mantras from the linga. Then, having cleaned the linga with darbhas, bhasma and the water mixed with earth collected from various sacred places, he should bathe the linga with cow-urine mixed with 'kashaya' water, with pure water and with 'pancha gavya' and worship it with sandal, flowers and other substances.

If the Guru is capable of knowing the series of mantras invoked and unified with the linga, then he should disunite them from the linga and withdraw them with the recital of jaala-mantṛa as said before and with the display of jaala-mudra. If he is not able to identify them, he should unify the Pranava-mantṛa with the linga. In order to nullify the evil effect of a mixture prepared with animal substances and deposited in the lingas, he should unify the astra-mantṛa with the linga. Having unified all those inauspicious mantras into one form with a lamp, the Guru should lift up the lamp associated with the mantras deposited in the linga and contemplating the complete withdrawal, he should take out those mantras reciting the 'jaala-mantṛa' and showing the 'jaala-mudra' as done before. Then, having once again cleaned the linga with the materials mentioned before and with the recital of astra-mantṛa, the Guru should perform mentally all those activities from the 'karṣana' to 'pratiṣṭha'.

The Guru should perform the installation, with the accompaniment of relevant mantras pertaining to each God and with the performance of relevant fire-ritual prescribed for each God. For such installation, 'lakṣhana uddharana'(carving the specific marks and symbols of the Deity), 'jala adhivasa'(keeping the image immersed in water) and 'sayana sthāpana'(placing the image on the couch) need not be performed. Having left out such rituals, the Guru should perform all other rituals. He may perform these rituals in the main shrine or in the front hall. The fire-ritual may be done either in the fire-pit or in the sthāndila designed in front of the Deity.

If savayambhu, daivika, bana, arsha and ganadhipa lingas have become chopped, mutilated with cracks or broken, the Guru should perform appeasing rites. He should do 'disa-homa' and arrange for the recital of the four Vedas- Rg and others. He should perform 'abhisheka' with 108 prasthas of milk. After this, he should perform 'santi-homa' and 'snapana abhisheka'.

Then, he should arrange for the feeding of the brahmins(who have studied the Vedas) and then for the feeding of the saiva-devotees. Having offered the bali with 'prabhuta havis', he should offer the 'tambula'. Either in the village or in the city, he should offer the bali at midnight with balls of mudga-anna, payasa, rice cooked with molasses and banana fruits. Such rituals should be done daily for seven days in order to nullify all the defects.

Everyday, the main sponsor(yajamana) should honor the Guru by offering gold coins or ornaments, new clothes and such other valuable items. After such honoring, the Guru should perform 'snapana' and offer the bali with 'prabhuta havis'. If all parts of the image have become decayed or deformed, the Guru should install a new image designed to be with same lineaments as those of the previous image. When svayambu and other lingas have become defiled with decay and other defects, the performance of appeasing rites should be done. These are the directions given in the Agamas.

In the buildings and in the images which are associated with all kinds of perfect lineaments, some insignificant defects might have occurred. Such insignificant defects may be ignored. If the width of the temple is increased or decreased by 6 matras, there is no defect; no need for the performance of 'santi'. Increase or decrease by 12 matras or one angula in the height, 2 matras in the ground, one matra in the pillars and other parts, one danda in the extent of village, kheta or pura type of city and such other settlements, one hasta in the enclosures, one yava in the measurements of linga, 4 yavas in the measurements of sakala type of images, one matra in the designing of pedestal, one matra in the entrance and such other parts, one valagra (tip of the tail) in the brama sutra - these need not be considered as defects. No need to perform appeasing ritual in front of the linga for such defects. The negligible measure of increase or decrease has been told here.

Now I will tell you briefly the exact and effective procedure of performing the rituals meant for attaining the desired fruits. All the desired fruits are accomplished through the power of mantras and such mantras are innumerable. All mantras are efficacious in accomplishing the intended purpose and all mantras are capable of yielding the desired ends.

Among such mantras, Aghora Astra Mantra is exceedingly powerful in nullifying the defects and disorder. The Deity of the mantra is black in color. His head is with locks of matted hair tied up with snakes. He is adorned with garland of skulls. His eyes are with a mixed color of yellow and reddish brown and His face appears with whitish large teeth protruding on two sides of the mouth. His matted hair is adorned with crescent moon. Being with a broad face, He is wearing a snake as the sacred thread. He is with huge body and large damshtra (large fang-like teeth). He is adorned with a waist ornament furnished with tinkling bells. He is holding a trident, the tips of which have pierced into the body of a great demon (asura) killed by Him. He is holding in his hands weapons such as sword, shield, bow, arrow, severed head, kalasakti (lance), boon-giving and fear-dispelling mudras, skull, snake, noose, barbed missile and mace. Two sharp and long fangs which are white and dreadful appear like protruding nails at the front of His mouth. He always remains as the protector of His own troops and as the One who inflicts terror and fear upon the troops of alien forces. He is the destroyer of the magic spells and heinous contrivances imposed by the enemies. He is capable of warding off all sorts of diseases and harms. He is efficacious in nullifying all kinds of sinful effects and danger. And, He is always compassionate towards the devotees.

He is to be meditated as surrounded by 8 Bhairavas- Asitanga and others - or he may be meditated without surrounded by such Bhairavas. Asitanga, Ruru, Canda, Krodha, Unmatta, Kapali, Bhishana and Samhara - these are the eight Bhairavas by whom Aghora Deva is surrounded. These Bhairavas appear with four hands, three eyes and black complexion. They are with great strength and vigor. They are holding trident and severed head in their upper hands and they are keeping their lower two hands in 'anjali' mudra in front of their chest. They appear with dreadful face and fang-like large teeth. They always function as directed by their Lord Aghora Deva.

"Om Jum Sah" - this is said to be the mula-mantra of the God of Immortality known as Mrutyunjaya. The same is the mantra pertaining to Lord Amrutesvara. The incantation of this mantra could be done either as associated with the 'kuta' letter('am') or not associated with this. This mantra should be repeated as associated with seven letters representing the seven ingredients of the body, from 'rasa' to 'sukla'. The body of the mantric form is composed of the letter 'ham'. The seven letters should be recited first. At the end of the mantra, the words 'raksha, raksha' should be recited and then the words which imply the desired fruit should be recited. In the beginning, the words 'Devadevesa', 'Devatattasya praanam' should be joined with the mula mantra.

anena sadṛśo nāsti mantrō mṛtyuñjayo dvijāḥ 	16

The seat of Amrutesvara is formed of the letter 'jum'. The form(murti) of the Lord is composed of the words 'Om Jum Sah'. The kuta letter should be placed at the center of the pedestal. This kuta-letter may be considered to be in the form of 'prasada' mantra of the Lord or of the nine-lettered mantra or of the letters related to the neck and lips. The brahma mantras and the anga mantras should be formed of 'ham' and other letters. O, the twice-born sages!, no mantra is there comparable to the mantra of the Lord of Immortality.

The Lord of Immortality is benignly present within the vessel(kalasa) containing the nectar. He is seated on the white lotus. He appears with four hands and three eyes and His matted hair is adorned with the crescent moon. He is having the tiger-hide as His waist garment and He is having the king of snakes as the ornament adorning the chest. His upper two hands are holding the trident and the fear-dispelling mudra and His lower two hands, joined together and positioned in front of the navel, are holding the nectar-vessel. If He is conceived to be with six hands, the right hands are to be visualized as holding the trident and rosary of rudraksha, the left hands as holding the skull and kundika-vessel. The lower two hands are to be visualized as holding the yoga-mudra.

In protecting the prana(principal vital air) and other vital parts, there is no mantra comparable to the mantra of the Lord of Immortality. No mantra equal to this mantra has appeared in the past or present or will appear in the future. The food should be consecrated and energized with this three-lettered mantra. By such consecration, the food becomes nectar and if such food is eaten by the sadhaka, he would become the conquerer of the God of Death. The sadhaka should take the water and he should consecrate it with the mantra of Lord Amrutesa with systematic repetition of the mantra of Lord Amrutesvara. By drinking this consecrated water, he would assuredly become the immortal one.

If unbroken durva-grass soaked in the milk is offered as oblations in the fire kindled with the woods got from special category of trees known as 'brahma-vrukshas', the sadhaka who offers such oblations would never attain death. To the sadhaka who daily worships Lord Amrutesa according to the prescribed specific way, untimely and immediate death will not occur. If a sadhaka does the incantation of Mrutyunjaya mantra for 100 times daily in the first month, and does the incantation of that mantra for 200 times daily in the second month and similarly increases the number of incantation in each succeeding month up to the completion one year, the God of Time(Yama) would circumambulate him, praise him and worship him and go back to his place. O, the brahmin sages!, there is no doubt about what has been told by me now.

With his eyes, words, feet and hands, such a sadhaka purifies the river-flowing areas, villages, cities and other settlements. There is no doubt about this. Then, where is the need to say that he is capable of dispelling the fear settled within himself, within those who are dependent on him or within all the living beings?

O, the twice-born sages!, then I will tell you the lineaments of Aghora Astra Deva, which are closely associated with seed letters and 'mala' aspects, for the purpose of visualaization(dhyana). Lord Aghora is attired in reddish clothes and he is with black color like the color of variegated balck pigment. He appears with eight hands, with straightened hair raised upward on the head and with two fang-like teeth. His lower lip appears as pressed by the fang-like teeth and His eyes are as red as the well-kindled fire. His waist is adorned with the garland of kinkini-bells and His feet, with nupura(anklet worn by male). His seven hands are holding the relevant weapons and He is adorned with all kinds of ornaments. He is wearing the white sacred thread and being adorned with red flowers ,He is very pleasant to look at. He is adorned with neck-ornament associated with 'dhuta' flowers and scorpions. His stomach , waist , neck, ears, chest, hands, shoulders, feet and fore-arms - all these parts are adorned with 14 snakes. He is seated at the center of lotus seat and He appears with three eyes and dreadful form. His four right hands are holding the lower part of the trident, 'vetala'(demonic spirit), sword and drum and his four left hands are holding the middle part of the trident, bell, shield and skull. His left foot is placed ahead of the right foot. Having meditated the form of Aghora Astra Deva in this way, the Guru should worship Him.

O, the twice-born sages!, next another type of visualaization of Aghora Astra Deva is told as delineated in the Scriptures. Listen to this description. Aghora Astra Deva should be meditated as apperaing with the brilliance of 1000 suns. He is the Lord who subdues and destroys the enemies. With the resplendence of His face and neck, he is illuminating the far end of all directions. He has three eyes and his tongue is shimmering like the lightning. His eye-brows, moustache, matted hair are with glowing resplendence. He is wearing the snake as his sacred thread. He is holding in his four hands trident, long and sharp knife, lance(sakti) and hammer(mudgara). He appears with four arms and four faces and his head is adorned with half-moon. Being with a large body and being adorned with snake-ornaments, he is in dancing posture. He is always intent on subduing the conceited devas, danavas and daityas.

For Aghora Astra Deva, the words 'prasphura, praspature' constitute the hrudaya mantra; the words 'ghora, ghora' constitute the siras mantra; then, the word 'tanurupa' forms the sikha mantra; the words 'cata, pracata' constitute the desired kavaca mantra; then, the words 'kaha kaha, vama, mandaya, ghora ghora' constitute the netra mantra; and , lastly the words 'astraya hum phat' constitute the astra mantra. Thus, the six anga mantras are to be known. All these anga mantras from the hrudaya onwards should be added with 'Om' in the beginning and 'namah' at the end.

When threats are imposed and destructions are caused by the troops of enemies, when incurable and prolonged diseases are seriously affecting the people, the Guru should meditate on these forms of Aghora Astra Deva. When the prescribed rituals are to be done for the sake of appeasement, vitality, taking hold of certain power and control and expiation, and when the occurrence of fearful incidents appears to be imminent, these forms are to be meditated. What is the use of speaking elaborately on this? By the power of the incantation of this mantra, prolonged and incurable fever, distress caused by the planetary positions, poisonous effects and such other miseries -all these get eradicated. Magic spells, heinous contrivances, mantric power, medicinal drugs prepared with poisonous herbs and such others, geometrical designs and letters engraved in metallic plates made for causing death and various troubles - all these get destroyed by the power of this mantra, like moths and locusts falling on the blazing flames of fire.

In the same way, the Guru, having contemplated the relevant forms of Pasupata Astra Deva, Siva Astra Deva and Kshurika Astra Deva, should worship them according to the procedure explained here. Having worshipped Aghora Deva, he should worship the Astra invoked and installed in front of Him. Aghora Deva should be worshipped in the south. Lord Sadasiva should be worshipped at the center.

Especially, the Guru should worship Aghora Deva in the south face of Lord Sadasiva. He should worship four Astra Devas in four directions in the order of Siva Astra, Aghora Astra, Pasupata Astra and Kshurika Astra. Having worshipped these Astras in the middle enclosure, he should worship the retinue-astras invoked around the four Astras. Having left out Siva Astra, the Guru may worship Pratyangira Astra in the place of Siva Astra. Similarly, Having left out Kshurika Astra, he may worship Sangrama Vijaya Astra at the center of the place meant for Kshurika Astra.

The one who worships the Astras in this way is considered to be in the likeness of myself. O, the twice-born sages!, either in this world or in the three worlds, there is nothing which could not be accomplished by him. What has been said here is absolutely true. By all means, these details should be safeguarded well and kept secret by the Guru, the Chief of the sadhakas. With all specific care, these should be preserved by him.

The full form of the mantra of Lord Dakshinamurti is now revealed to you. Impeccable power of speech could be attained through the incantation of this mantra. It is highly praised as the mantra which is instrumental in gaining victory. Through the grace of Lord Dakshinamurti, all other related fruits also are attained by the sadhaka who does the 'japa' of this mantra. First, Om Namo Bhagavate- these three words are to be pronounced. Then, 'Dakshinamurtaye Medham Prayaccha Svaha' - these words are to be pronounced. This is said to be the mula mantra of Lord Dakshinamurti. The vowels pertaining to hrudaya and others should be pronounced in the actual incantation of the mantra. At the end of these mantras, 'namah', 'svaha', 'vashat', 'hum', 'vaushat' and 'phat' should be added with hrudaya and others respectively.

The form of Lord Dakshinamurti should be meditated as endowed with following lineaments. He is with the resplendence of pure crystal and His face is serene and delighted. His matted hair on the head associated with Ganga and moon is curled and tied up. His waist is attired with tiger-hide. He is with four hands. His right hands are holding the rosary of pure sphatika and jnana-mudra and His left hands are holding a lotus flower and fire. Or, He may be visualized as holding varada-mudra and abhaya-mudra or the scripture known as Sivajnanabodha in His hands. He appears with three eyes and is associated with the Great Bull. He is surrounded by the group of Rishis. Having meditated on the Lord in this way, the sadhaka should accomplish all the deeds.

The seed-letters belonging to Bhairava Astra Deva who appears with a dreadful face casting fierce look are formed with 'ra', 'ha', 'u' and 'au' and these letters are adorned with bindu and nada. ('hrum', 'hraum') Or, His seed letters may be considered in a different way. Urdhva repha(ra) and 'bha' join together to form the seed letter. ('bhrum', 'bhraim', 'bhraum'). These constitute the powerful mantra known as 'Sangrama Vijaya Mantra'. The sadhaka who attains 'siddhi' in the incantation of this powerful mantra becomes the conquerer of all the three worlds through the power and vigor of this mantra. Whichever deed is to be accomplished, be it small or insignificant, in the three worlds by any sadhaka, if that is done without the incantation of this supreme mantra (mantra raja), such a deed would never be accomplished to be fruitful.

Now, the visualaization of Bhaskara Deva (Surya) is told. "The Bhaskara Deva who menifests in the heart-lotus of the sadhaka is seated on the lotus flower along with His Sakti. Holding a lotus flower in his hand, he appears with four faces. Associated with his four supreme Saktis who are in red color, he is pervading all directions. Mounted on the half-body (of Aruna), he is attractive and auspicious. He is holding in his eight hands abhaya-mudra, varada-mudra, rosary of rudraksha, skull, noose, goad, khadvanga and shield and he is being worshipped by the group of planets. I prostrate before this Bhaskara Deva for the attainment of wealth and fortunes."

The sadhaka should conceive the brahama mantras and the anga mantras pertaining to Bhaskara in the prescribed way. He should worship the four Saktis, Vistara and others, in the four faces of Bhaskara. Then he should perform the worship of 'bhoganga'. In all the four corner-directions, south-east and others, the four Saktis, Dhruda and others, are to be worshipped. Netra Mantra should be worshipped in the south. Thus the worship of innermost enclosure(garba avarana) has been told. In the next outer enclosure, Dipti and other Saktis are to be worshipped. In the enclosure which is outside of the previous one, the planets should be worshipped. In the outermost enclosure, the Directional Deities are to be worshipped by the Guru in the prescribed order. Even if a sadhaka is intent on attaining the desired wordly benefits, let him always meditate and worship Bhaskara Deva.

Pratyangira Devi, the presiding Goddess of the Pratyangira Astra appears with a lion-like face, dreadful fang-like teeth, hairs on Her head raised upward and glowing like the flames of fire. She is black in color, like the color of black pigment. She is with three rounded and reddish eyes. In Her two right hands, She is holding a trident and high-sounding drum. In Her two left hands, She is holding severed head and tender leaf. Being in a delighted state, She is roaring and raising boisterous sounds of laughter and other sounds. She is attired in black colored dress. She takes delight in dancing, keeping a piece of flesh associated with sinews. All parts of Her body are adorned with fitting ornaments made of pearls. She is wearing the hide of antelope. In the name of Bhairavi, She is being worshipped by the Devas. Having meditated on such a form of Pratyangra with concentrated mind, let the sadhaka destroy all of his enemies; let him eradicate all the diseases; let him ward off the mantras employed against him by the enemies.

To attain the state of being highly proficient in knowledge and science, the foremost sadhaka should offer the oblations with standard black-sandal(krishna agaru) or with 'nabhi kinjalka' got from the lotus plant, in the fire-pit specifically designed for the purpose. By offering the oblations with the buds of kadamba-flowers, the power of keeping yakshini under control assuredly occurs to the sadhaka. If the wise and diligent sadhaka offers the oblations with priyangu-grain, plantain flowers, karavira-flowers, clarified butter, honey, faggots got from khaadira and other trees, such a homa would yield a delighted state at all levels. If he offers the oblations with white mustard, pearls, asvamamsi, and payasa made with payas, immediately he is blessed with auspicious time and honored state.

The sadhaka who offers oblations with black-sesame and clarified butter along with dhurtura-flowers and kahdira-woods, he becomes capable of immobilizing the evil consequences of magic spells and of the homas done with heinous motives. If a sadhaka offers the oblations with red-lotus, red-sandal, clarified butter of tawny colored cow and the milk of the same type of cow for 10,000 times, he is sure to become powerful enough immediately to keep the people in infatuated and deluded state.

If the sadhaka offers oblations with buffalo-milk, arka, ass-milk, gairika-powder, red flowers and charcoal pieces for one hundred thousand times, there would occur remarkable upliftment for his lineage. If oblations are made with kumkuma, gorocana, cotton seeds, guggulu and bamboo pieces, the sadhaka attains immediate benefits as desired by him. There is no doubt about this. Oblations are to be made by the Guru with nimba-flowers, paddy, oil got from the nimba-seeds, milk of arka plant and mercury in order to cure the diseases such as raja-yakshma and others.

In order to cure the diseases concerned with stomach, oblations should be offered with sesame soaked in ghee, durva-grass soaked in ghee, silk cloth, parched paddy and madhu-traya(trimadhura). To attain 'agni-siddhi'(to remain unaffected by fire), oblations should be offered with dry ginger, tippili and pepper, reciting the mula mantra preceded by the seed-letter of fire. In order to cure the diseases concerned with eyes, the Guru who has known well about the mantras should offer oblations with milk, clarified butter and honey, reciting the mula mantra added with netra mantra.

In order to eradicate poisonous fever, the Guru should make oblations with tender leaves of mango tree. In order to ward off all kinds of troubles and worries, the Guru should offer the oblations with moist tender leaves of mango tree sprinkled with the recital of Mrutyunjaya mantra along with clarified butter with the accompaniment of the recital of 'Rudra-santi' and all other related mantras. In order to nullify the defects caused by 'vata', oblations are to be made with clothes and others; to nullify the defects caused by 'sleshma', oblations are to be made with white mustard; to nullify the defects caused by 'pitta', oblations are to be made with cool sandal wood and others. These oblations may be offered for one thousand, ten thousand or one hundred thousand times or thrice this number.

Withdrawing the form and the concerned mantras invoked and installed in the original miniature temple (mula balalaya) and installing them in the newly made image within the main shrine is known as 'avarta'. Then, the 'anavarta' is described. If the image duly installed in the shrine has been defiled by the touch of outcast, of a person born of mixed caste or of a person born in the lowest caste, if the image has not been daily worshipped for more than one month and if there have occurred cracks or breakages in the walls, ceiling and such other parts of the temple, if the main image and the pedestal get displaced or become shaky, the performance of proper rituals to set right the defects and omissions goes by the name 'anavarta'. Having withdrawn the form and the mantras from the image of the main shrine (mula alaya), installing them in the image of the miniature shrine and re-installing them in the image of the main shrine after the completion of renovation is known as 'punaravartana'. If the icons meant for the festival, formed and formless image (Sivalinga) and the images of Sakti have been split or damaged by weapons and such other tools, if the original color of the images has faded or completely vanished, if the main limbs (anga) and the minor limbs (upanga) of the installed images have been damaged or broken, if the weapons such as the shield, arrow and such others and the ornaments and other embellishments have become damaged, if the lotus-pedestal of the installed image has become broken, if defects and defilement have occurred in the temple structure, if the eightfold band (ashta bandhana) applied to the images has loosened or broken, the performance of renovation to set right such defects and damages is known as 'antarika'.

na tithirna ca nakṣatraṁ na vārādyamśakādikāḥ
kālāpekṣām vinā kuryāccheṣāṇyanyāni suvratāḥ 	10

The 'avarta' consecration is associated with 'yatra homa'. All other consecrations are performed without 'yatra homa'. O, the twice-born sages!, in the 'avarta' type of consecration, fixing of auspicious and fitting time, such as the month, fortnight, lunar mansion and others should be done according to the process detailed for the installation of Sivalinga. O, the sages who have fulfilled good austerities!, all other consecrations are to be performed without looking into the factors of lunar day, lunar mansion, week-day, amsa and such others.

sarvamāvartavatkuryāt kiṁ tu mūladvayānvitam 	12

The Guru should perform the 'anavarta' type of consecration in the same way as detailed for the 'avarta' type of consecration. It is to be known that 'anavarta' consecration is the one in which 'lakshanoddhara', 'jaladhivasa' and 'sayanadhivasa' are not performed. In the 'punaravartana' type of consecration, the Guru should perform all the rituals in the same way as detailed for the performance of 'avarta' type of consecration. But, it is to be noted, that in the 'punaravatana', rituals related to the main shrine are performed on two occasions.

snapanam kārayedante cānyatsarvam samānakam 	15
evam yaḥ kārayenmartyassa puṇyāṁ gatimāpnuyāt 	16

O, the twice-born sages!, next I will tell you briefly the process of 'antarita' type of consecration. Having left out the activities related to the image, such as 'ratna nyasa', 'nayanonmilana', 'jaladhivasa' and 'sayanadhivasa', the Guru should cover all parts of the image with a new cloth and perform 'kumbha nyasa' (arranging the kalasas) and the fire-ritual. At the end, he should perform 'snapana abhisheka'. All other rituals are common. A person who arranges for the performance of such consecrations in this way will attain a supreme plane of existence which is to be attained through the performance of virtuous deeds.

The directions for the construction of shrines for the Arsha Lingas are now told. The Lingas installed and worshipped by the Sages such as Kausika and others are known as 'Arsha Lingas'. The Lingas whose bottom is larger than its upper part, whose top is larger than other parts, whose middle portion is larger or lesser than its other parts, whose rounded portion looks like a fruit and which are not marked with characteristic lines and which are different from the 'Manusha Lingas' (Lingas installed by the devotees) are known as the 'Arsha Lingas'. The features of such Lingas are told here.

The measure of the pedestal should be twice that of the linga-bhaga(pujamsa) and the measure of the main shrine should be thrice that of the pedestal. Thickness of the wall may be half the measure of the breadth of the shrine, equal to that measure or one part out of three parts of that measure. Or, it may be twice the circumference of the linga-bhaga, three parts out of four parts in excess of that measure, half in excess of that measure or one part out of seven parts in excess of that measure. The measure of the pedestal is also said to be thrice the circumference of the linga-bhaga.

Thrice the measurement of the pedestal should be the extent of the main shrine (garbha gruha). Thickness of the wall should be two parts out of three parts of breadth of the main shrine. The height of the wall should be the same as it was earlier. Another method of deciding on the measurements is now told. The breadth of the pedestal may be held to be twice the measure of the diagonal of the linga-bhaga(if it is with four equal sides) or one and half times the measure the diagonal. The breadth may be from one and half times up to two times that measure, increasing the measure by half times each time. The extent of the main shrine(naligruha)may be twice, thrice or four times the measure of the pedestal. Thickness of the wall may be half, three parts out of four parts, two and a half parts, one part of the pedestal or equal to the breadth of the shrine. The height is the same as determined before. Then, another method of ascertaining the measure of the pedestal and other parts is told.

The breadth of the pedestal may be decided according to the measure of the diameter of the linga-bhaga (if it is of cylindrical shape). The extent of the main shrine should be thrice the breadth of the pedestal. Thickness of the wall may be three parts out of five parts or half the breadth of the shrine. The breadth of the square pedestal may be half the height of the linga-bhaga. The extent of the main shrine should be four times the breadth of the pedestal. Thickness of the wall may be one part out of three parts or one part out of six parts of the breadth of the shrine. Then, another way of ascertaining the measures of the main shrine are told.

The breadth of the square pedestal should be twice the breadth of four-sided linga-bhaga. The extent of the main shrine should be thrice the breadth of the square pedestal. Thickness of the wall may be one part out of three, four or five parts of the breadth of the shrine or twice the breadth of the linga-bhaga. Another method is now told. The breadth of the pedestal may be fourteen parts out of sixteen parts of the circumference or diagonal of the linga-bhaga. The extent of the main shrine should be four times the breadth of the pedestal. Thickness of the wall may be one part out of four parts, three parts or eight parts of the breadth of the shrine. There is another method. The breadth of the pedestal should be twice the breadth of the side of the linga-bhaga or one part less than ten parts of the diagonal of the linga-bhaga. The extent of the main shrine should be five times the breadth of the pedestal. Thickness of the wall may be one part out of five or seven parts of the breadth of the shrine or half that breadth.

One or two parts out of eight parts of the breadth of the linga-bhaga may be decreased while deciding on the breadth of the pedestal and the main shrine. In this way, there are many ways of deciding on the possible measures of the pedestal and the main shrine. Such measure may be decided by the expert builder according to his choice. Even for svayambhu-linga(self-manifest linga), various methods of deciding on the breadth of the pedestal and the shrine explained here may be applied. Such methods are applicable to the single storeyed vimana(super structure). Considering the pedestal or not considering the pedestal, the measurements of the main shrine and thickness of the wall should be determined according to the rules set forth earlier for the two-storeyed vimana, based on the 'vastu-nakshatra' of the temple.

Then, the directions the construction of main shrine for the 'Paurusha Linga' are told. The Linga installed and worshipped by a human being in whom deep devotion for the Lord is actively present is known as 'Paurusha Linga'. If a shrine had been built randomly, without following the well settled rules of construction of the shrine for a Linga installed by a devotee previously, a shrine should be built perfectly for that Linga according to the measurements of that Linga.

nālīgṛha viśālam syāt pīṭhavistāra mānataḥ

The breadth of the pedestal should be thrice the measurement of the circumference of the linga-bhaga. The extent of the main shrine should be three times the breadth of the pedestal. Thickness of the wall may be one part out of three or four parts of the breadth of the shrine. The height of the shrine may be retained as it was before. From one and a half of the measurement of the diameter of the linga-bhaga and increasing that measure by half of that measure each time, the breadth of the pedestal may be held to be two and a half times the diameter of the linga-bhaga. The extent of the main shrine may be three, four or five times the breadth of the pedestal. Or, the breadth of the pedestal may be equal to the height of the linga-bhaga or twice or one and a half times that height. The height of the shrine should be maintained as it was before. Another method is now told.

पूजांशद्विगुणं पीठमुदयं तु विशालतः ॥	७

liṅgāt pīṭhaṁ tato garbhaṁ garbhādbhitti viniścaye
ekātsapta yavāntaṁ tu mātrādeka vivṛddhitaḥ 	9
trimātrāntaṁ tadā vṛddhiṁ hrāsaṁ ca parikalpayet

The breadth of the pedestal should be twice the height of the linga-bhaga. Four or five times the breadth of the pedestal may the breadth of the main shrine. All other parts of the shrine may be held to be the same as they were before. In determining the measurement of the pedestal based on that of the linga-bhaga, the measurement of shrine based on that of the pedestal and the measurement of the thickness of the wall based on that of the shrine, the measurement may be increased by one 'yava' to seven 'yavas', increasing each time by one yava. The previous measure may be increased or decreased up to three yavas.

udayaṁ prāgvaduddiṣṭaṁ yacca svāyambhuvādiṣu ।
tathā tadapi tadgrāmamānaṁ paurāṇa pauruṣe ॥	12

In this way, the pedestal should be designed in the main shrine, maintaining an accurate correspondence between the extent of the shrine and the pedestal. Thickness of the wall may be half, three parts out of four parts of the breadth of the shrine. Alternately, thickness of the wall may be held to be one part out of eight parts or one fourth of the breadth of the shrine. Height of the shrine may be retained to be same as the previous measure. In the case of 'svayambu linga', the extent of the main shrine may be decided according to the vastu-measurements of the village in which it is present. The same process may be applied even for the 'paurusha-linga' which seems to have been installed many centuries ago.

In the shrine meant for the 'arsha-linga', various members of the structure such as 'pattika', 'adhishtana' should be provided. 'Upana', 'jagati', 'kantha', 'pattika', 'kumuda' and other such parts up to the top roof should be provided for the shrine meant for the very ancient 'paurusha-linga'. In the shrine designed based on the breadth of the pedestal, if the extent of the shrine is divided in terms of even numbers, all the outer parts of the structure should also be divided in even numbers only. If even number is applied for the main shrine, the same even number of divisions should be maintained for other parts of the temple. The mixture of even and odd number of divisions is not recommended for the construction. The Linga installed and worshipped by the devotees of all the three castes is also considered to be 'paurusha-linga'.

Now, I will tell you the process of constructing shrines based on the measurements of already installed Lingas. The Sthapati who has known well the principles set forth in the Scriptures should construct the shrines according to the Lingas such as 'svayambhu', 'bana', 'daivika', 'arshaka' and the Lingas installed by the Siddha-ganas, Vidyadharas and the Great Souls.

tatsamaṁ dviguṇaṁ vāpi triguṇaṁ vā caturguṇaṁ ।

pañcaṣaḍguṇitaṁ vāpi dviguṇādyaṁ pragṛhyatām ॥ 4

The Sthapati should construct the shrine based on the measurement of the circumference, width and height of the linga-bhaga(pujamsa) and on the measurement of the diagonal or diameter of the linga-bhaga. The breadth of the pedestal may be equal to one of these measures or two times, three times, four times, five times or six times the measurement of one of these - circumference, width, height and karna.

O, Sages who have fulfilled essential austerities!, there are eight and nine kinds of measurements available from the images of Gods. Keeping these measurements as they are or keeping half or quarter of these measurements as basic units, as many as thirty-two kinds of measurements have been enumerated. Each one of these measurements may be taken for deciding the breadth of the pedestal. The width of the main shrine may be two, three, four, five or six times the breadth of the pedestal. Other kinds of measurement (such as thickness and height of the wall) may be retained as they were previously.

pīṭhagarbhe bhavedevam bhavet prāsāda vistare
aṅgulīhasta pūrṇārtham saptamātrāntam ācaret 	11

The width of the main shrine which may be twice, thrice, four times, five times or six times the breadth of the pedestal should be divided into many convenient parts. Based on such parts, the measurements of the wall should be decided. Thickness of the wall may be from one part up to twice the breadth of the shrine, increasing by one part each time. All other minor measurements of various members of the wall may be the same as they were earlier. In deciding the breadth of the pedestal from the linga-bhaga, width of the shrine from the breadth of the pedestal and thickness of the wall from the width of the shrine, there may be increase or decrease by one yava to seven yavas, increasing by one yava each time.

In this way, the main shrine is constructed based on the pedestal of the Linga. This process is extended in deciding the total width of the temple. Fractional measurements should be avoided and in order to keep the angulas and hastas to be in whole numbers, one matra(sub-unit of angula) to seven matras may be increased to or decreased from the available measurements.

I will tell you vividly the process of installation of 'anga-linga', in a brief way. The Linga is two kinds- 'pradhana'(the primary one) and 'anga'(the secondary one). The Linga for which various mantapas (pavilions), retinue Deities, enclosures(prakaras), gopuras and such other structures have been built is known as 'Pradhana-linga'. The Linga which is installed in the middle of five enclosures without contradicting the features and worship of Pradhana-linga and without retinue Deities is said to be 'Anga-linga'.

prākāratraya bāhye tu yadi devāḥ prakīrtitāḥ ।

Anga-linga is installed in recommended auspicious directions for deriving the worldly enjoyments and it is installed in all directions for the attainment of liberation. West, north and east - these are the auspicious directions recommended for the installation of Anga-linga. Vimana and other essential structures should be constructed based on the proportionate measurements applied to the primary temple. Linga(avyakta), images with fully exposed limbs(vyakta) and the images in which all the limbs are not visibly made(vyakta-avyakta) may be installed as Anga-lingas. For the Anga-lingas which are installed in the enclosures outside the third enclosure, a few retinue Deities corresponding to that Linga may be installed. The daily festival for such Anga-linga should be performed without violating the ritualistic process of the Primary-linga.

The installation of Anga-lingas and other forms should be performed only according to the process being followed in the system of Suddha Saiva(system of the Saiva Agamas). Such installation should never be done by the followers of the Pasupata system and the Mahavrata system. It should not be done by the followers of Buddhism, Jainism, Kapalika, Pancaratra and others or by others who are following the systems other than the systems mentioned before. If such installation has been performed by the followers of these adverse systems due to carelessness and negligence, then such installation should be nullified immediately and the Anga-linga should be re-installed according to the Saiva system.

The height of Anga-linga should be from one hasta to three hastas. Anga-linga whose height exceeds three hastas should not be designed. If designed so as to exceed three hastas in height, installation of such Anga-linga would bring in all sorts of defect. Similarly, the shrine for the Anga-linga should never be constructed in such a way that its breadth exceeds 15 hastas. The shrine of Anga-linga should be built based on the measurements applied to the main shrine(garbha gruha) or based on the system of 'angula' measurement(bera-angula or mana-angula system). Both the shrine and the Anga-linga are considered to belong to the 'sarvadesika' type. The preliminary activities such as 'ploughing the land'(karshana) and other related rituals may or may not be performed separately for such construction of the shrine for the Anga-linga. The ritual known as 'placing of the first brick' and other rituals should be performed for this. In this way, the highly knowledgeable Acharya should design the Linga, vimana and others through Sthapati and duly install them.

The word 'pra' means 'long before ' and 'thishta' means 'well settled' or 'well established'. Since installation is performed based on the rules established long before, it is characteristically called 'pratishta'. All rituals such as the 'placing of the final brick on the top', renovation and other related activities should be performed according to the rules established earlier in the Agamas. O, the foremost twice-born Sages! while performing the purificatory festival known as 'offering of purifying threads'(pavitra arohana) to the Primary Linga, same ritual may be performed to Anga-linga also at the same time or it may not be performed at that time. If left out at that time, such offering should be done separately for the Anga-linga later, according to the directions given in the Agamas.

The devoted person who arranges for the installation of Anga-linga and others is surely blessed with longevity, wealth, celebrity, auspicious fortunes, health, various enjoyments and many descendents. Having obtained all things and comforts as desired by him, he attains blissful existence with Siva after leaving this body. Such devoted person may install such Lingas from one to eleven in the same temple. He may arrange for the installation of 108, 54 or 27 Lingas, 100, 50 or 25 Lingas or more than 100 Lingas or innumerable Lingas. The devoted person(karta) who arranges for such installation attains oneness with me. He is none other than Myself. There is no doubt about this.

The installation of 'Sarvadesika Linga' and others is now explained. The rules set forth for the construction of the shrine, designing of the Linga, pedestal and the base structure(adhara sila) are common as far as Sarvadesika Linga and the locations are concerned. The shrine for Sarvadesika Linga may be constructed in all the areas characterized as 'satvika', 'rajasa' and 'tamasa'. Especially, if a shrine is constructed for Sarvadesika Linga in rajasic area, it would be a powerful source for the victory of the country and it would enable the people achieve the three goals - dharma, artha and kama and it would yield all the desired fruits. Above all, it would grant the final liberation for the person who builds such shrine and for the person who commissions him in this work.

varāṭākhyam viśiṣṭam syātsārvaśyaṁ munīśvarāḥ 	6

The 'nagara' type of Linga is highly suitable and beneficial in the kruta yuga. The 'dravida' type of Linga is specifically suitable and beneficial in the tretā yuga. The 'vesara' type of Linga is specifically suitable and beneficial in the dvapara yuga. The 'sarvadesika' type of Linga is specifically suitable and beneficial in the kali yuga. The 'varata' and the 'kalinga' types of Lingas are suitable for all the yugas and all the places. O, Munisvaras!, the 'sarvadesika' type of Linga is more specifically powerful than the 'nagara', 'dravida', 'vesara', 'kalinga' and 'varata' types of Lingas.

In this way, the efficacy and supreme nature of 'sarvadesika' type of Linga is specifically extolled. O, the eminent twice-born sages!, just as the specific nature of 'svayambhuva', 'bana', 'daivika', 'arshaka', 'manusha' and other Lingas has been vividly told, even so the efficacy and supremacy of 'sarvadesika' Linga has been declared in the Scriptures. The installation of 'sarvadesika' Linga has to be essentially done by those who are desirous of beatific upliftment. In the installation of such 'sarvadesika' Linga, the Guru need not take notice of the defect which could occur due to the adopting the rules given in two or more Agamas, combination of mantras, combining of Acharyas, combining of locations, combining of time, and the combining of yuga. He need not even observe other kinds of defect. In this way, the greatness of 'sarvadesika' Linga is specifically described.

The proportionate measurements and the derived measurements pertaining to the main shrine of 'sarvadesika' Linga are now told. Starting from 12 hastas and increasing by 2 hastas each time, the extent of the shrine could be increased up to 50 hastas. For the shrines of 'saradesika' and others, the height of the shrine may be decided according the various types of height such as 'santi', 'paustika' and others. The five kinds of height - 'santi' and others - should be 3/2, 4/2, 5/2, 6/2 and 7/2 of the breadth of the shrine. The foremost Guru may decide it to be one and a half time to three times its breadth. There is no defect if the height gets decreased or increased by one, two or three hastas.

vistārāyāmato vātha nāhenātha parīkṣayet ।
prasaṅgena ca kathyante leśādāyādayo'pi ye ॥	16

O, the twice-born sages!, in the case of 'sakala' type of images(images whose limbs are fully exposed) 'aya' and other aspects need not be calculated in the conventional way(as told) earlier based on the measures of length and breadth. For these, 'aya' and other factors are determined based on the breadth or height or both the breadth and the height. Or, they may be decided based on the length alone or breadth alone or the thickness or circumference. Incidentally, various methods of calculating the 'aya' and other factors are now explained.

Multiply the taken measure by 9, 8 and 6 and divide by 11, 12 and 5 respectively. The remainders denote the 'aya'. These are the three methods. Multiply the same measure by 3, 8, 9 and 10 and divide by 14, 6, 8 and 7 respectively. The remainders give the value of 'vyaya' factor.

Multiply the same measure(decided for the breadth or height) by 12 or 7 or 6 and divide by 27. The remainder denotes the 'dina' factor and its compatibility should be ascertained by counting the nakshatras in the following way. Starting from the birth-star of the king or the main sponsor, the Guru should count the nakshtras up to the nakshatra(dina) denoted by the remainder. The counting should be done in a cycle of nine. The number arrived lastly when counting the 'dina' denotes a particular effect. There are nine effects - tushti, sampat, vipat, kshema, pratyara, sadhaka, vadha, maitra and parama maitra corresponding to the number 1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8 and 9. If the counting ends with 1, the dina-factor pertaining to the taken measure denotes tushti. If it ends with 2, the dina-facor denotes 'sampat'(porosperity). Similarly, the effects of other numbers should be understood, as told earlier. Generally, the number 1 is to be avoided. But, if it comes when the counting is done for the third time, it is considered to be auspicious. That is, the third birth-star (anujanma) is considered to be auspicious. If the 'dina' synchronizes with the eighth zodiacal sign counting from the 'lagna', it is to be avoided since it would inflict death upon the master (king, sponsor or the owner). If the 'dina' happens to be 'vainasika nakshatra' in the third counting or in some other calculation, it should be avoided even though it may denote good effect(sampath and others). All others are considered to be auspicious. Having known all such details, the Guru should decide the nature of dina.

Yogas such as 'viyoga'(mrutyu and others) and the 'ganas' such as 'asura' and 'manusha' are inauspicious and therefore these should be avoided by those who are intent on attaining auspicious benefits. Those who are in pursuit of liberation may fix the measure as desired by them. If the taken measure is divided by 7, 6, 5, 4,3 or 9, the remainder denotes one of the 9 'amsas' - 'taskara' and others. Taskara indicates theft. In this way, the effect of the amsa is made known through its specific name.

The Guru should multiply the taken measure by 11, 9 or 3 and divide by the number of yonis. The remainder will denote the auspiciousness or inauspiciousness of the yoni-factor. There are 8 kinds of yonis, dhvaja and others; 7 kinds of yonis, shadja and others; 5 kinds of yonis, pruthivi and others; 3 kinds of yonis, dakshinagni and others. Thus, there are four different methods of analyzing the yoni-factor. The eight yonis, dhvaja and others have been enumerated before. Shadja, vrushabha, gandhara, pancama, madhyama, nishada and daivata - these are the seven yonis. Among these, shadja, vrushabha and madhyama are considered to be auspicious. Among the five yonis related to the five elements- pruthivi, jala, agni, vayu and akasa- pruthivi and jala are considered to be auspicious. Dakshinagni, avahaniyagni and garhapatya are the three yonis related to fire. Among these, garhapatya and avahaniya are considered to be auspicious yonis.

liṅgaberādike caivaṁ āyādyam kalpayed dvijāḥ ॥	31
kim tu liṅge ca bere ca tuṅgenaiva nirīkṣayet ।	32

The Guru should multiply the taken measure by 9, 8 or 6 and divide by 7. The remainder will denote name of the week-day. (1 denotes Sunday, 2 denotes Monday and so on). Sunday, Tuesday and Saturday are inauspicious days. When all these factors synchronize with auspicious yoga, they would yield best effects in the construction of temple, pavilion, enclosure, super-structure and such others. O, the twice-born sages!, the Guru should analyze the nature of aya and other factors while installing the Linga and other images. But, in the case of Linga and images, he should analyze these factors based on its height only.

In the case of 'sarvadesika' Linga, there is no place for the occurrence of vicious defects while ascertaining the proportionate measures based on the height. The presence of all the needed lineaments need not be observed especially in the 'sarvadesika' type of 'svayambhu', daivika, bana, gana and manusha Lingas. The breadth or the height or the features of the brahma-bhaga and others and the different forms of the head-portion of the Lingas need not be examined.

The finer lineaments of the images such as Brahma, Nandi and others and other stone images are observed according to their forms as told in the scriptures. In the same way, the lineaments of these Lingas are to be observed through the three parts - brahma bhaga, vishnu bhaga and rudra bhaga - or two parts or one part. The part which appears to be associated with special features is considered to be the specific form of the Lord. The measures of the temple, pedestal and the main shrine should be decided according to the Linga.

When renovations for the shrine, pedestal and such others are to be undertaken, such works should be completed according to the rules given in the concerned chapter dealing with renovations and the pedestal and the shrine should be set right. When a Linga seems to be without pedestal, designing and joining of the suitable pedestal is ordained.

If the unexposed bottom portion of 'svayambhu' Linga and other self-manifest images are forcibly seen by digging the ground and such other activities, the ruler and the country would be affected by thieves and inconceivable difficulties. The portion of the self-manifest image itself which is visible outside is considered to be associated with three parts- brahma, vishnu and rudra. Therefore, the Guru or others should never proceed to see and examine the unexposed bottom part of the Linga. If it is examined due to ignorance, death would occur to the doer. There is no doubt about this. The main features of 'sarvadesika' Linga have been told in this way. The process of installation of such 'sarvadesika' Linga is according to the directions given earlier in the concerned chapter.

Next, in the order of subject matter, I will tell you briefly about the installation of Bana-Linga. There was an asura whose name was Bana. He entreated Lord Siva to present him variously shaped Lingas for the sake of systematic worship by which he could achieve all the desired fruits. The Great Lord Isvara gave him 140 millions of Lingas. He was worshipping these Lingas systematically and in due course of time, after achieving the desired fruits, he disposed all those Lingas in various places such as Lingadri, Kalikagarta, Srinaga, Kanyakasrama, Kanyatirtha, Nepala, Mahendra, Amaresvara and in many other places, particularly in the rivers and the mountains.

The size of those Bana-Lingas varies from the size of masha-grain(bean seed) to one hasta. Starting from the size of masha-grain and increasing the size by quarter of an inch each time, various Bana-Lingas could be taken for the sake of worship, according to one's own desire. Rules regarding to the breadth and thickness(or circumference) need not be observed for the Bana-Lingas. But only those Bana-Lingas which are bereft of defects such as lines, dots and other marks are fit for the worship.

Amongst all Lingas, Bana-Linga is held in high esteem. O, the foremost among the twice-born sages!, For the Bana-Linga, snapana, worship, offering of incense, perfumes, flowers, eatable food and fruits and other rituals should be done in the same way as done for the svayambhu and other kinds of Lingas. Strict rules related to the construction of the shrine and the designing of the pedestal need not be observed for the Bana-Linga.

The Guru who is the foremost among the knowers of the Scriptures should construct a suitable vimana for the Bana-Linga either in the outskirts of the village and other settlements or in the adjacent surroundings of the village. The pedestal for the Bana-Linga could be made of stone, earth, metal, suitable wood, gem and others. The material of the pedestal should be the same as the material of the Linga in order to derive all the desired benefits and fortunes. O, the twice-born sages!, the height of the pedestal may be one part out of three parts of the height of the Linga or two parts out of five parts of it. Or, it may be equal to the height of the pit dug for taking out the Linga. Or, it may be equal to half the height of the Linga. Or, it may be with a height as desired by the Guru, provided it does not exceed the measure of the pit.

The Bana-Lingas which are available in the flowing rivers are with well-shaped form. Such Lingas and even other Lingas available there are conducive to all states of happiness. The Bana-Lingas which are available in the mountains and other places are also of the same nature. That part which appears as raised either in the thick portion or thin portion of the Linga is to be known as the face of the bana-Linga. In the case of Bana-Linga formed of gem, that part which appears with much brightness either in the thick portion or thin portion is considered to be the face. That is the upper side. This is applicable even to the Bana-Lingas formed of metal. The Bana-Linga which is associated with naturally formed pedestal or associated naturally with a broken pedestal is considered to be of the supreme category. This is applicable even to the Lingas formed of gem, metal and earth.

Now, the directions for the installation and other related rituals concerned with all types of Bana-Lingas are told. The foremost kind of auspicious time is enjoined for the installation of the Lingas made of stone. The medium kind of auspicious time is enjoined for the installation of moveable Lingas, images and such others. The inferior kind of auspicious time is recommended for the installation of Bana-Lingas and the related images. All kinds of time are suitable if the installation is done for the sake of those who are desirous of final liberation. The suitability of the month, solstice, lunar mansion, week-day and such other factors of auspicious time need not be analyzed for such installation. The same rule is applicable even to the installation of Bana-Linga. Or, if desired, the inferior kind of auspicious time may be decided for it.

Having firmly applied 'vajra bandha' so as to join the Linga and the pedestal, the Guru should commence the rituals concerned with the installation. He should perform the 'offering of sprouts'(ankura arpana) according to the directions given earlier. Then he should do 'ratna nyasa' with 9 or 5 gems or with one gem.

At the center of hallow provided in the middle of the upper part of the pedestal, he should place gold. For the Bana-Linga, the Guru need not make the characteristic lines and marks over the rudra-bhaga. Its own form itself is considered to be associated with characteristic lineaments.

Having performed the 'purification of the linga' with kneaded earth and by sprinkling the consecrated water with the accompaniment of 'astra mantra' of Siva, he should perform the ritual known as 'jaladhivasa'. He should design 9 or 5 fire-pits associated with an altar for the sake of performing the 'linga-adhivasa'. If the installation is to be performed in the house, the Guru should design a sthandila instead of constructing the altar.

Sending off the Silpi with due honours, declaring the auspiciousness and purpose of the time and the event (punyaha vacana), feeding of the learned brahmins, besmearing the ground, examination of the selected site, vastu-puja, offering of oblations in the sacred fire - all such activities are to be done for this installation. Reposing of the image(sayana adhivasa) should be done on the sthandila. Worship should be performed in a systematic way as explained earlier. Having taken out the image(placed for jala adhivasa) from the water, the Guru should purify it with five substances got from the cow(pancha gavya). Having worshipped it and covered it with pure cloth, he should offer the protective thread to the Lord. Having carefully placed the image over the couch, he should place the siva-kumbha and the sakti-kumbha(vardhani) and eight kumbhas around these two, for the sake of eight Vidyasvaras. All the kumbhas should be wound around with thread, associated with lid, covered with new cloth and filled up with perfumed water. He should place gold coin in each kumbha.

Having well arranged all the kumbhas in this way, the Guru should invoke and worship in the due order all the Deities such as Tattvas, Tattvesvaras, Murtis and Murtisvaras. Having completed this, he should kindle the fire in the fire-pit and offer the oblations with faggots, clarified butter, cooked food, parched paddy and sesame, each one for 108 times, reciting the mula mantra. O, the foremost among the twice-borns!, these oblations should be done for 54 times for the sake of Manonmani(Sakti); for 10 times, for the sake of Vidyasvaras. As said before, he should offer the oblations for the sake of Tattvas and Tattvesvaras, Murtis and Murtisvaras. Having screened the Linga with a cloth, he should offer the 'naivedya'(food and fruits).

Having bathed in the next early morning, he should worship the presiding Deities of the sacrificial pavilion and the Linga and offer the oblations for 100 times with the recital of aghora mantra. He, having adorned his five limbs with respective ornaments, being delighted with the offered sacrificial fees(dakshina), should perform the 'mantra-nyasa' for the Linga, upon the approach of auspicious time fixed for that. The sacrificial fees for the Guru may be from one nishka (of gold) to nine nishkas.

Having conceptually ideated the seat and the 'vidya deha'(form constituted of mantras), the Guru should unify the mula mantra with the Linga. With the consecrated and energized water contained in the Kubhas, he should bathe Siva(in the form of Linga) and Sakti, who has assumed the form of the pedestal. Then, he should perform the 'snapana-abhisheka' and at the end, he should offer 'naivedya' with devoted heart. Other rituals which have not been told here should be performed according to the directions given earlier under the context of 'Linga-sthapana'. The fourth (conclusive) homa and the worship of Candesa need not be performed in the worship of Bana-Linga. The Guru should worship the Lord(whose presence is in the Bana-Linga) daily, according to the directions given in the chapter dealing with 'arcana'.

The defect of getting loosened or split does not occur in the Linga in which the rudra-bhaga and the pedestal are joined firmly with the eightfold band(ashta bandhana). But, in an ordinary Linga , such defect could occur within a short time. The Linga which has become decayed and appears to be affected with many defects such as the loosening of the band and others should not be disposed even according to the rules. As soon as the defect is observed, the Guru should join the pedestal and the Linga firmly with gold band and other materials, making sure that the joint is with firmness. Having done so, he should perform the 'santi' ritual. He should worship the Lord in the kumbha, sthandila, mandala or specially designed pedestal, having placed it over the ground selected in the east or in the recommended direction or placed it inside the mantapa constructed in the recommended direction. Having worshipped the Lord, he should worship Manonmani invoked in the north side of the Linga. He should worship the Lord and the Sakti along with 8 Vidyasvaras with sandal, flowers and such others associated with various offerings. The Guru should keep himself adorned with ornaments suitable to the five parts of his body until the completion the rituals.

At the end, he should send off the invoked Deities with the offering of arghya-water. Then, he should perform the fire-ritual meant for appeasement. The fire-ritual may be done at the beginning and the end of this specific activity of setting right the defects. Or, it may be done daily during the course of this activity. The sprinkling of consecrated water need not be done for this. Instead, oblations could be offered in view of the sprinkling. Under this context, the designing of sthandila and the arrangement of the kumbhas should be done in front of the Linga.

The Lord and the other Deities should be invoked in the kumbhas. Therefore, the Guru should energize the water contained in the kumbhas with the concerned mantras, relevant for each kumbha. O, the twice-born sages!, the process of renovation in which 'snapana' is not included is not recommended. The Linga should be bathed well with the consecrated water contained in the kumbhas or it may be simply sprinkled with the kumbha-water. At the end of this ritual, the Guru should perform the 'snapana-abhisheka' and worship Lord Siva with the materials collected specially for this activity.

This is the detailed process told for setting right the loosened band made of eight substances. When the interior ground gets damaged and becomes uneven and when the applied mortar gets decayed and vanishes, these defects should be set right within the shortest time possible, desisting from the usual daily worship at that time. For this, the Guru need not perform the fire-ritual. After setting right the defects, he should worship the Linga with sandal, flowers and such other offerings and perform the 'santi-homa'. Either in a big scale or in a small scale, he should perform the 'murti-homa' and the 'disa-homa'.

If the hardness between the pedestal and the ground gets weakened and decayed, both the pedestal and the ground should be set right. When they are rendered to be fit for the rituals concerned with the worship, the Guru should perform the 'snapana-abhisheka' for the Lord and the pedestal. Having cleaned them with cloth and other materials in such a way that they appear devoid of any impurity. O, the foremost twice-born sages!, if 'snapana' is not possible, the Guru should sprinkle the consecrated water with the recital of astra-mantra for the sake of 'snapana'.

If the ceremonial bath to be performed for the Lord gets interrupted for many consecutive days, the Guru should perform the 'maha snapana abhisheka' to alleviate the defect; in addition to this, he should offer 'maha havis'. For the sake of welfare of the king and the country, he should perform these. The performance of these is significantly beneficial to all the people of the village, to those who are living adjacent to the temple, to the person who arranges for such performance, to the person who directed him to do so and to the Acharya.

Now I will explain various methods for the designing and installation of suitable pedestal for the Linga with specifications related to the lineaments of different pedestals. The pedestal whose width is equal to the height of the linga-shaft is capable of accomplishing all the desired fruits. The pedestal whose height is equal to the height of vishnu-part of the Linga, which is bereft of any defect related to the shadow and which is associated with a fitting hallow at the center of its upper face is considered to be auspicious. What could not be attained by a devotee who has designed such a pedestal and duly installed it?

The width of the pedestal may be equal to the height of the Linga or half the height of that. On dividing the height of the Linga into 26 equal parts, 27 measures could be obtained for the width of the pedestal.

Or, having multiplied the height by 3 and by 5, the difference between these two measures should be divided into 26 equal parts. By doing so, 27 measures could be obtained for the width. In this way, the width of the pedestal to be determined according to the height of the Linga has been explained well.

Beginning with 15 angulas and increasing by one angula each time, the width may be ascertained. The width may be increased from 16 angulas up to 20 angulas. O, the twice-born sages!, the width of the pedestal which exceeds the height of the Linga is not acceptable.

The bottom and the top of the pedestal should be with equal measure. The bottom with a decreased measure is not desirable. Having divided the width of the bottom into six equal parts or up to 16 parts, the top of the pedestal may be designed so as to be less than the base-measure by 1 part. The height of the pedestal should be equal to that of the vishnu-part. Or the height of the brahma-part may be divided into 4 equal parts and the height of the pedestal may be held to be in excess of 3 parts of the height of the brahma-part. If the difference between these two measures (original height and the increased height) is divided into eight equal parts, nine different measures could be obtained for the width.

O, the foremost among the twice-born sages!, for the Lingas which are in smaller size, the particular pattern of placing the base-stones need not be performed. The required measurements of the pedestals for the manusha-linga, svayambhu-linga and others and for the moveable lingas are now told briefly. The width of the pedestal may be equal to the height of the Linga, half the height or twice the height of that linga. On dividing half the height and twice the height into seven equal parts, seventeen kinds of width-measure could be obtained. O, the much celebrated twice-born sages!, the exact measurement of the base of the pedestal should be taken as explained before. The height of the pedestal may be half the width, equal to the width or one and half the width. On dividing the decreased and increased measure into seven equal parts, seventeen kinds of measure for the height could be obtained. For the svayambhu-linga and others, it would be defective if the width of the pedestal is ascertained based on the diameter or circumference of the Linga.

The form of the pedestal may be square or circular; one of them is acceptable. This is applicable to the Lingas made of metal and gems and to the Bana-linga. The pedestal for any image (endowed with all the features of form) may be with a width equal to three quarters of the height of the image or to one quarter. The difference between these two measures should be divided into 16 equal parts. By such division, 17 kinds of width could be obtained. The pedestal may be in the form of square or rectangular. Or, the width may be twice the height of the image. If the difference between the original height and the increased height is divided into 16 equal parts as done before, 17 kinds of measure could be obtained for the width.

About the width and length of the pedestal has been told. Now, the details regard to the height are told. The height of the pedestal may be equal to its width or equal to half of that width. The difference between these two should be divided into 16 equal parts and by such division, 17 kinds of measure for the height could be obtained. Or, the height may be one and one-fourth(quarter). As told before, if the difference between the two measures(1 and one and one-fourth) is divided into 8 equal parts, 9 kinds of measure for height could be obtained. The height of the lotus-like pedestal should be one part out of four parts(one-fourth) of the height of the image. This is held to be of supreme kind. The height taken to be one part out of eight parts is considered to be of secondary type. If the difference between the two (one-fourth and one eighth) is divided into 8 equal parts, nine kinds of measure for the height could be obtained.

For the image which is in standing position, the width at the top of the lotus-like pedestal should be one angula up to 12 angulas in excess of the length of feet of the image, increasing the measure by one angula each time. For the image which is in seated posture, the width of the lotus-like pedestal should be 23 digits (matras, units of angula). Increasing this by half angula each time, the width may be up to the limit of 36 angulas. The width at the bottom of the pedestal should be one part out of three parts in excess of the measure of the top. Such measure is considered to be the foremost. Leaving out 12 parts, if the remaining portion is divided into 16 equal parts, 17 kinds of measure for the width could be obtained.

The length of the pedestal may be equal to its width or twice the width. If the difference between these two measures is divided into 8 equal parts, nine kinds of measure for the length could be obtained. If the height of the image is divided into 3 parts up to 11 parts, the upper lotus-moulding should be with a measure of 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 parts (one part out of three parts, two parts out of 4 parts and so on). The lotus below the upper one may be with a height of the remaining parts (2 parts out of 3 parts, 2 parts out of 4 parts and so on). The upper lotus may be without petals. Or, it may be designed so as to be with 4, 8, 12 or 16 petals.

For the image which is in standing posture, the recommended width and height should be given to the pedestal. For the image which is in seated posture, the height should be in excess of the width. Having divided the width and the length into 3 parts up to 11 parts, the Guru should leave out 1, 2 or 3 parts and install the image in the remaining portion the pedestal. The projected moulding should be designed in the middle of the left out parts.

For all kinds of images, the pedestal may be designed so as to be with or without the projected moulding at the border of the upper face. If one and same pedestal should be designed for several images, the sthapati should design it in such a way that it presents elegant appearance, provided with essential embellishments. The pedestal may be circular, apsidal(elongated circle), in the form of half-moon or lotus flower. For the image which is in seated posture, half-moon pedestal is the most suitable.

Now, I will explain how to embellish the pedestal with various parts associated with proportionate measurements. If the height of the pedestal of Linga is divided into 16 equal parts, one part is for the plinth; 4 parts for the lower fillet(jagati); 3 parts for the torus(kumuda); one part for the eight-petalled lotus; 3 parts for the upper fillet(karna); one part for the fillet above the karna; 2 parts for the large fillet (maha patti); and one part for the surrounding water-course(ghrutavari). The pedestal associated with such embellishments is considered to be Bhadra Pitha.

Out of 16 parts of the height of the pedestal, 2 parts are for the plinth; 5 parts for the lotus-like fillet; 2 parts for the circular fillet; 4 parts for the upper lotus-like fillet; 2 parts for the fillet(pattika) above the previous one; and one part for the surrounding water-course. The pedestal provided with such embellishments is known as Padma Pitha.

If the height of the pedestal is divided into 21 equal parts, 3 parts are for the plinth; 5 parts for the lotus-like fillet above the base; one part for the fillet(kampa); 3 parts for the fillet(karna) above the kampa; one part for the fillet above the karna; 5 parts for the upper lotus-like fillet; 2 parts for the top fillet(pankti); and one part for the surrounding water-course. Such proportionated pedestal is also known as Padma Pitha.

Out of 16 parts of the height of the pedestal, one and half parts are for the base; 4 parts for the lower fillet (jagati); one and half, for the lotus-like fillet; one part for upper fillet(urdhva kampa); 2 parts for the lilly fillet(kumuda); one part for the pattika-fillet; 2 parts for the karna-fillet; 2 parts for the padma-fillet; half, for the pattika-fillet; and the remaining half for the surrounding water-course. The pedestal associated with such embellishments is called Srikara Pitha.

The height of the pedestal should be divided into 25 equal parts. Out of 25 parts of the pedestal, one part is for the plinth; one part for inverted cyma(padma); one part for the vajana-fillet; 4 parts for the jagati-fillet; 3 parts for the cyma; half part for the neck-fillet; 3 parts for the upper cyma; 3 parts for the kumuda-fillet; one part for the vajana-fillet; 2 parts for the karna-fillet; one part for the vajana-fillet; one part for the cyma above; 2 parts for the great vajana-fillet; one part for the kampa-fillet; and half part for the surrounding water-course. The pedestal provided with such embellishments is called Sambhava Pitha. Another type of the pedestal is then explained.

If the height of pedestal is divided into 21 equal parts, one part is for the plinth; 4 parts for the jagati-fillet; one part for the karna-fillet; one part for the cyma; 3 parts for the kumuda-fillet; one part for cyma; one part for the vajana-fillet; 2 parts for the karna-fillet; one part for the vajana; one part for the padma; 2 parts for the great fillet(maha patti); one part for the padma; one part for the kampa-fillet; and one part for the surrounding water-course(ghrutavari). The pedestal associated with such embellishments is known as Vijaya Pitha.

If the height of the pedestal is divided into 16 equal parts, one part is for the base; one part for the inverted cyma; 4 parts for the jagati; one part for the cyma; one part for the griva-fillet; one and half parts for the upper cyma; 2 parts for the kumuda; half part for the cyma; half part for the kampa; half part for the karna; half part for the kampa; half part for the padma; half part for the maha-patti; one and half parts for the surrounding water course at the top. The pedestal associated with such embellishments is called Sampatkara Pitha.

If the height of the pedestal is divided into 11 equal parts, one part is for the plinth; 3 parts for the jagati; one part for the kampa; 2 parts for the karna; one part for the vajana-fillet; 2 parts for the maha-patti; and one part for the surrounding water-course(ghrutavari). The pedestal endowed with such embellishments is called Nandikavrutta Pitha.

The height of the pedestal should be divided into 15 equal parts. One and half parts, for the base; half part for the kampa; 3 parts for the padma; half part for the kantha(neck part); one part for the cyma; 2 parts for the kumuda-fillet; one part for the padma; half part for the kantha; 3 parts for the cyma; one and half parts for the pattika; and half part for the ghrutavari(water course). The pedestal provided with such embellishments is called Svastika Pitha.

The pedestal associated with such ornamental mouldings is known as Purnacandra Pitha.

If the height of the pedestal is divided into 16 equal parts, one part is for the base; 2 parts for the lotus; one part for the kampa-fillet; 6 parts for the gala(neck); one part for the kampa; 2 parts for the lotus; 2 parts for the maha-patti; and one part for the ghrutavari. The pedestal associated with such embellishments is known as Sthandila Pitha. Another type of pedestal is now told.

If the height of the pedestal is divided into 18 equal parts, 2 parts are for the plinth; one part for the kampa; 2 parts for the lotus; one part for the kampa; the remaining parts are for other mouldings as explained before. Or, if the height of the pedestal is divided into 19 equal parts, 2 parts are for the plinth; one part for the kampa; one part for the kampa above the previous one; 2 parts for the lotus; one part for the upper kampa. The remaining parts are for other mouldings as detailed before. The pedestal associated with such embellishments is called Svayambhuva Pitha. O, the foremost among the twice-born sages!, other important mouldings such as adhisthana , upa pitha and the like should be provided for the pedestal.

On the upper surface of the pedestal, the surrounding water-course should be designed with the measurement of one part, one and half parts or two parts, when the height is divided into many parts as desired by the sthapati. The maha-patti may be with a raised projection or with a projection equal to the ghrutavari. The ghrutavari may be circular or square. The pedestal may be designed so as to be associated with adhisthana and kampa. The measure of karna may be joined with the measure of kampa and such other elements. Or, the measure of kampa may be joined with the measure of karna by increasing or decreasing the measure by one yava-grain to eight yava-grains, applying one yava each time.

These modifications may be done for all parts of the pedestals meant for sakala form, nishkala form, moveable image, fixed image, images made of metal, gems, stone, wood, earth or any other material, bana-linga and others. Even for the pedestal applicable to the nishkala-form, there are rules governing the proportionate measurements. Such measurements are told now.

The width at the base of the spout (of ghrutavari) should be one part out of three parts of the width of the pedestal. Its width at the front part(ending part) should be equal to the length of the spout. This is applicable to all types of Lingas. The width may be equal to half or quarter of the width of the pedestal. The difference between these two should be divided into 16 equal parts. By doing so, 17 kinds of measures could be obtained. O, the foremost among the twice-born sages!, it may be equal to the width, one fourth in excess of that width or three-fourth in excess of that width. If the difference between one and one fourth and one and three-fourth is divided into 16 equal parts, 17 kinds of measure could be obtained.

These measures should be applied to the base of the spout and the front part of the spout. One-fourth, half or three-fourth, three parts out of five parts, five, four or three parts out of seven parts could be applied to the front part of the spout. The designing of ghrutavari may be done so as to be associated with sufficient recess and width around the rim. On either side(above and below) of the lotus, there should be kampa-fillet. One part for the lower kampa, two parts for the lotus and one part for the upper kampa - in this way, the mouldings should be provided in the due order.

Now, the proportionate measure of the spout is told in terms its thickness(circumference). Thickness of the spout should be equal to the measure of the upper karna. The height of the pedestal should be divided into 21 equal parts. The thickness of the pitha-spout should be 4 parts. Increasing this by one part each time, the thickness may be up to 10 parts.

The pedestal should be made of the same material by which the main image has been made. The joining of such pedestal and the image is considered to be of supreme kind. If that material is not available, the pedestal may made with a different material. The Linga for which the pedestal is of the same material is not recommended for those who are desirous of worldly enjoyments. The Linga whose pedestal has been made with different material is beneficial for them and superior also. This is applicable to the Lingas made of gems and crystal. The pedestal made of single stone(unsplitted piece) is highly suitable. If single stone is not available, two or three pieces of stone may be used for the pedestal. Even in this case, the lower section of the pedestal may be made of stone pieces. But the upper section should be made with a single stone and it should be associated with ghrutavari and spout(pranala). The water-course and spout may be provided to the lower section of the pedestal also.

The separate materials to be used for designing the pedestal should be perfect and free from the defects normally observed, such as roughness, soundless, dotted and so on. The pedestals meant for the images associated with features of form(sakala murti) may be without spout. Or they may be provided with the spout. They may be designed so as to be with or without the water-course(ghrutavari). The pedestals meant for the Bana-linga and such others, may be in the form of square or rectangle. Having designed the lower section of the pedestal with separate materials, the sthapati should design the upper pedestal with single material. All the additional embellishments such as the side-designs(pithalagna), elliptical structure(prabha) and others should be provided. They may be detachable or they may be designed unseparable from the pitha.

The pedestals should be designed so as to be associated with various types of fillets, carvings of garlands of pearls, rows of various flowers stitched together, array of several flames of fire, all kinds of ornamental mouldings and arches. They may with pleasing frontal look and thickness as desired by the sthapti. They may be square or rectangular in shape, designed with accurate measures. Normally, they should be designed according to the height or width of the main image. They may be designed according to the measures as desired by the sthapati. Thus, the lineaments of the pedestals have been explained. Now, the details related to the proper installation of the pedestals are told.

This is the 47th chapter titled "Embellishments of Various Pedestals" in the Great Tantra called Uttara Kamika

४८ पिण्डिका स्थापन विधिः 48 piṇḍikā sthāpana vidhiḥ

48 Directions for the Installation of the Pedestal

पिण्डिका स्थापनं वक्ष्ये श्रूयतां मुनिपुङ्गवाः ।

आधाराधेय संयोज्यं स्थापने क्रियते क्रमात् ॥ १

पिण्डिकायां उमादेवी लिङ्गे स्याच्च सदाशिवः । piṇḍikāyām umādevī liṅge syācca sadāśivaḥ ।

tayoryaḥ kriyate yogassā pratiṣṭheti gadyate ॥ 2

Now I will explain the process of installation of the pedestal. O, the foremost Sages!, listen to these directions. In the process of installation, long lasting unification of the supporting structure and the supported image is accomplished in the due order. In the pindika(pedestal), there is the presence of Uma(Sivasakthi) and in the Linga, there is the presence of Sadasiva. The action by which the unification of Siva and Sakthi is fulfilled is called 'pratishtha'.

योगश्च द्विविधो ज्ञेयस्त्वाद्यः पश्चाद्भवस्त्विति ।

आद्यः प्रागेव कथितो लिङ्गस्थापन कर्मणि ॥ ३

द्वितीयः कथ्यते विप्राः पूर्वं तस्या यदाकृतिः ।

dvitīyah kathyate viprāḥ pūrvam tasyā yadākṛtiḥ ।
tathaiva ca punaḥ kuryādanyathā doṣakārakam ॥ 4

It is to be known that such unification is of two kinds - that which occurs first(adya) and that which occurs subsequently(pascat bhava). The 'adya' type of installation has been explained before in the chapter dealing with the installation of Linga. O, the twice-born sages!, the second type of installation is now explained. The new pedestal should be designed to be in the same form as that of the previous pedestal. Designing the new pedestal in a different form will lead to distress and miseries.

मानवे पीठसंकल्प विधानं परिकीर्तितम्।

चतुरश्रेऽथ वृत्ते वा रूपान्तरयुतेऽपि वा ॥ ५

daivike cārṣake bāṇe liṅge svāyambhuve tathā |
vṛttaṁ sarvatra kartavyaṁ pūrvākṛtiyutaṁ tu vā || 6

For the Linga to be installed by a common devotee, the exact way of designing a suitable pedestal should be contemplated well. That pedestal may be in the form of square, circular or may be in another convenient form. For the Daivika Linga, Arshaka Linga, Bana Linga and Svayambhuva Linga, the pedestal should be designed to be in the circular form. Or, it may be designed to be in the form of the previous pedestal.

The material used for the previous pedestal should be used for the new pedestal or the material superior to the previous one may be used for making the new pedestal. All the activities concerned with this should be done in the same way as explained earlier under the chapter on 'Linga Sthapana'. Those activities which were not told there would be explained now. O, the twice-born sages!, listen to these details. First, 'the offering of fresh sprouts' should be performed according to the directions set forth earlier. A sacrificial pavilion should be erected in front of the shrine, in the north, in the south-east or in the north-east. The measurements for such pavilion should be taken in the same way as detailed before.

The Guru should construct an altar at the center of the pavilion according to the directions given in the chapter on 'Linga Sthapana'. He should construct nine or five fire-pits around the altar, all of them in the form of 'yoni' and provided with three steps(mekhalas). He should erect a snapana-pavilion for the purpose of bathing the image, either in the east or north of the sacrificial pavilion. In this way, having completed all the preparatory works, the Guru should commence the essential rituals.

Having performed special 'puja' for Siva, praised Him and prostrated before Him several times, the Guru should entreat the Lord, obtain His kind permission and begin the subsequent rituals. Having designed a raised platform(sthandila) in front of the Linga, he should place Siva-kumbha and Vardhani-kalasa at the center of the sthandila and arrange eight vessels(ghatas) around these two kumbhas in an orderly way. The kumbhas and ghatas should be wound around with thread, should be provided with lid, bundle of darbha-grass(kurcha), new cloth and tender leaves of mango-tree.

Then he should worship the concerned Deities with sandal, flowers, garlands, incense and such other substances and perform the ritual known as 'punyaha vacana'(declaring the auspiciousness of time, date and the event). He should ideate the seat(asana) and the form(murti) of the concerned Deities. Then, having invoked Siva who is present in the Linga, he should install His presence in the Siva-kumbha. Similarly, he should invoke Sivasakti present in the pedestal and install Her presence in the Vardhani kalasa. Having invoked the presence of eight Vidyasvaras in the eight kalasas placed around the central kumbhas, he should worship them with sandal, flowers and other substances and complete the worship with the offering of 'naivedya'. Then he should perform the fire-ritual on the sthandila designed in front of the kalasas.

He should offer the oblations for 1000 times with the recital of mula mantra and with the recommended faggots, clarified butter, cooked rice, parched paddy and sesame. Or, he may offer the oblations with each of the substances mentioned above for 100 times. Having designed a sthandila in another place and having installed siva-fire there, he should offer the oblations for 100 times with the accompaniment of aghoraastra mantra, for the sake of appeasement(prayschitta).

Worship should be performed for the Linga and the kumbha on each day, in the same way as the daily-worship is done. The Guru should gently rub the pedestal with a small chisel made of gold, recitiing the astra mantra and submerge it under the deep water of river or pond and remove the patches of mortar accumulated over the pedestal. Santi-homa should be performed daily by offering oblations for 100 times.

Then the Guru should perform the rituals concerned with the installation. The process of such performance is told here. Having rubbed the surface of the image with whetstone, he should perform 'abhisheka' for Siva with the mixture of five fruits, five kinds of soil, astringent water, cow-urine, cow-dung and other kinds of water, reciting the pranava and astra-mantra. Having worshipped the Lord by offering new cloth, flowers, sandal and other substances, he should design a sthandila at the center of the mantapa(pavilion) and place the pedestal there.

Having worshipped the pindika(pedestal) with sandal, flowers and other substances, the Guru should display 'yoni' mudra. Having pleased Sakthi with the offering of honey and ghee, reciting the mantra of Mrutyunjaya, he should hold the vessel made of copper or brass containing the honey and clarified butter along with a needle made of gold and show it to the Sakti. He should do this reciting the netra-mantra.

Then he should show the heaps of various grains, cow associated with calf, and virgin to the Sakthi, reciting the hrudaya mantra. Having removed the screening cloth, the foremost Guru should enable the devotees see the sanctified pedestal. Having bathed the image of Sakthi as done before, he should worship the Sakthi and offer the new cloth, sandal, flowers and other substances. Having taken the image in procession around the village in clockwise direction, he should reach the river bank. Having designed a suitable sthandila there, he should place the pedestal over it.

The Guru should arrange 8 vessels for the sake of gaurdian-deities of eight directions in due order and worship Devi and the kalasas which are furnished with bundle of darbha-grass and covered with new clothes. Then, having placed the kalasas which are wound around with thread, furnished with lid, new cloth, gold coin and the bundle of darbha-grass and which are energized by 8 Saktis on the wooden platform near the water-source, he should reach the sacrificial pavilion which is with four arches, beautified with canopy, flags, rows of darbhas, garlands of flowers and pearls and whose entire area has been brightened with mutitudes of lighted lamps, which is associated with luminous retinue items and which is furnished with all characteristic features. Then having sent off the sthapati with due honors, he should arrange for the feeding of learned brahmins and besmear the interior area with cow-dung. Then, he should perform 'punyaha vacana' and 'vastu homa'.

Having sprinkled the consecrated water over the four entrances one by one and having worshipped the Deities invoked on the entarances and the Gaurdian-deities of eight directions, the Guru should enter the sacrificial hall through the west-entrance and sit on wooden or darbha seat, being north-faced. Having rendered his body to be identical with relevant mantras, he should worship Siva in his heart, perform the internal fire-ritual at the navel and meditate on Siva at the midpoint between the eye-brows. With his soul being identical with Siva, he should take the jnana-khadga(sword of knowledge designed with darbhas) in his right hand, wear the relevant ornaments over five parts of his body and proceed to worship the kumbhas, astras and the lords of eight directions.

Having tied the protective-thread over the spout or the neck part of the pedestal, the Guru should design a sthandila with 8 dronas of paddy-grains, 4 dronas of rice and 2 dronas of sesame and parched paddy, strew the darbhas and flowers over it and spread the hide of antelope and others. The couch for 'sayana adhivasa' should be prepared in this way. If such things are not available, the couch could simply be designed with silk-cloth. Having ideated a fitting seat there, the Guru should place the pedestal over it, reciting the hrudaya mantra.

Having covered the pedestal with two clothes, the Guru should place the kalasa which is wound around with thread, covered with cloth, in which nine gems and lotus made of gold are deposited, and which is furnished with the bundle of darbhas, tender mango-leaves and new cloth. Having invoked the presence of Devi into the kalasa, he should ideate a seat for Her and worship Her with sandal, flowers and other substances. He should arrange 8 vardhani-vessels around the Devi-kalasa. The vardhani-vessels should be furnished with kurca(darbha), cloth, thread, gold coin, tender leaves, fruits and lid. Eight Saktis - Vama and others - are the presiding Saktis of these eight vessels.

Having worshipped the pedestal and the vardhani-kalasa with sandal, flowers and other substances, he should unify Tattvas, Tattvesavaris, Murtis and Murtisvaris with the pedestal. The three tattvas -atma, vidya and siva - should be unified with the part below the karna, kantha(neck) and the part above the karna respectively. The corresponding Tattvesvaris are Kriya, Jnana and Iccha respectively. The eight Murtisvaris are : Dharika, Diptimat, Ugra, Jyotsna, Ceta, Balothkata, Dhatri and Vibhvi. These eight Saktis are to be contemplated in the due order.

If the number of fire-pits is five (instead of nine), all those rituals which are not mentioned here should be performed according to the directions given in the chapter dealing with the installation of Linga. Having worshipped all the Deities with sandal and other substances, the Guru should commence the rituals related to homa. The oblations should be offered with faggots, clarified butter, cooked rice, parched paddy, sesame, white mustard and yava-grains. Palasa, udumbara, asvattha and nyakrodha - faggots got from these trees should be offered in the fire-pits designed in the east, south, west and north respectively. Sami, khadira, mayura and srivruksha - faggots got from these trees should be offered in the fire-pits designed in the south-east, south-west, north-west and north-east respectively. Palasa-faggots should be offered in the main fire-pit. Or, palasa-faggots may be offered in all the fire-pits.

With the recital of mula-mantra pertaining to Devi, the Guru should offer the oblations for 1000, 500 or 108 times. One part out of ten parts of the number of oblations done with the mula mantra should be offered with the recital of 'anga-mantras'. Then the Guru should sprinkle the consecrated water contained in the 'santi-kumbha' over the pedestal and perform the ritual known as 'sparsa-ahuti', making use of the darbhas meant for it. In each fire-pit oblations should be offered separately for the Tattvas and Tattvesvaris and other Deities. With the recital of aghora-astra mantra, oblations should be offered for 100 times for the sake of 'prayascitta'(appeasement). Having performed 'protection' with the ashes collected in the darbha-blades, he should contemplate the entire range of tattvas and offer the balls of cooked rice for the Deities invoked in the interior of the hall and for the Protecting Lord(Kshetresvara) of the village.

On the next early morning, the duration of which is exceedingly pure, the Guru and the assisting priests (Murtipas) should take bath and complete the daily rituals(nitya anusthana). The Guru, holding the samanya-arghya vessel in his hand, should worship the entrances and the protecting Deities of the entrances and worship the Goddess. Having duly worshipped the pedestal and the vardhani-kalasa with sandal, flowers, incense, lighted lamps, naivedya and such others and offered 'tambula' at the end, the Guru should please the Devi by offering the oblations into the fire and perform the homa for the sake of 'prayascitta'. Then, he should offer the 'purna-ahuti'(consummate oblation) which is efficacious in nullifying all the defects and omissions .

Having taken the pedestal and lifted up the kumbhas, the Guru should circumambulate the temple in clockwise direction, being accompanied by the rich sounding of all musical instruments, dancing and singing , enter the main shrine and place the pedestal and kalasas in front of the Linga. Then he should fix the pedestal according to the directions given for the installation of Linga.

If the pedestal is to be installed for the Bana-linga, the Guru should place the Linga over the sthandila designed in the mantapa erected in front of the shrine. The Bana-linga should be well covered with fresh cloth and it should be placed in such a way that its head is in one of the auspicious directions. Having removed the pieces of mortar and other impure substances from the pedestal, the Guru should place it in the same sthandila and perform the unification of Linga and the pedestal there itself.

prāgukta vidhinā kṛtvā āsanāṇuṁ tato nyaset ।

The learned Guru should deposit the nine gems in a definite pattern in the hollow provided in the pedestal. Or, he may deposit gold plate there. All other rituals should be done in the same way as done for the installation of Sivalinga. Then he should firmly apply the binding band made of 8 or 3 ingredients. Punyaha-vacana, sprinkling, bathing with the water contained in the 'santi-kumbha' - all such activities should be done according to the directions given earlier. Then, the Guru should identify the asana-mantra with the pedestal.

The Guru should identify the Kriya Sakti with the pedestal according to the direction set forth earlier. He should place the Siva-kumbha and Vardhani-kalasa in front of Sivalinga. Having taken the 8 vardhani-vessels which are arranged in another altar and for which Vama and others are the presiding Saktis, he should place them in front of the Lord and proceed to do the 'jiva nyasa' for them. Or, he may place the Vardhani-kalasa at the center of the altar and the eight vardhani-vessels around it and proceed to perform the 'jiva nyasa'.

tāvadatṛa tvayā devi sānnidhyaṁ kuru sarvadā |
liṅgasamsthāpanaproktaṁ dakṣiṇādyam ca dāpayet ॥ 72

The 'jiva nyasa' should be done in three locations - pedestal, linga and the kumbha. This should be specifically done in the process of nyasa. At the end, the Guru should perform 'snapana abhisheka'. Or, he may do the ablution with the mixture of five fruits or simply with pure water. Then he should worship Sakti with sandal, flowers and other substances and entreat: " O Devi!, let your vibrant presence in this pitha be continued for ever, so long as the sun and moon are present in this world." The chief yajamana(sponsor) should honor the Guru and other priests with sufficient ceremonial fees(dakshina) as explained under the context of 'Linga sthapana'.

bāṇādau sa ca neṣṭasyādathavā paribhāvyatām |

Worship should be done in an elaborate and special way continuously for four, three or two days or at least for one day. Fire-ritual should also be performed in all these days. The oblations should be offered with 'payasa' reciting the Sakti-mantras mentioned earlier. Either in the fourth day or in the first day, the worship of Candessvara should specifically be done. Such worship need not be performed for the installation of the pedestal of Bana-linga. Or, such worship may be conceptually done.

पीठ संस्थापनस्यापि फलं लिङ्गप्रतिष्ठया ॥ ७५

pīṭha saṁsthāpanasyāpi phalaṁ liṅgapraṭiṣṭhayā || 75

samānam kathitaṁ yasmāt praṭiṣṭhaikobhayatra ca || 76

The fruit to be derived from the installation of the pedestal is the same as that derived from the installation of Linga, since this installation is one and the same for both the pedestal and the Linga.
