

THE VISUALIZATION OF THE DEITIES OF THE TRIKA

BY ALEXIS SANDERSON

1. THE TRIKA

1.1. By the term Trika I intend an entity in ritual rather than theology. I refer to a cluster of Tantric Śaiva cults¹ with a common system or 'pantheon' of mantra-deities. The distinctive core of this pantheon (yāgaḥ)² is the three goddesses Parā, Parāparā and Aparā, and the two alphabet-deities Śabdarāśi[-bhairava] (also called Mātrkā[bhairava]) and Mālinī.³

1.2.1. The best documented of these cults is that which is expounded by Abhinavagupta in his Tantrāloka on the basis of the Mālinīvijayottaratantra. Also in this branch is the Siddhayogeśvarimata (/Siddhāmata, Siddhātantra), probably the earliest and most fundamental of the Trika's scriptures. This work survives, but in what is certainly a much shorter redaction than that known to the Kashmirians.⁴

N.B. My emendations of quoted passages are indicated as follows. The emendation is printed in roman type followed by the rejected syllables of the MS or edition printed in italics within parentheses.

(1) The word Tantric (tāntrikaḥ) is used here in its wide sense, i.e. to cover both Tantric and Kaula forms of ritual. For the narrower sense of the word, in which it is opposed to Kaula, see Sanderson 1990.

(2) For yāgaḥ in this sense, lit. 'that which is worshipped' (ijyata iti yāgaḥ), see, e.g., Kṣemarāja on SvT 2.158b (yāgaṃ tatraiva vinyaset): ijyata iti yāgo mantragaṇaḥ; also on SvT 13.1 and NeT 16.58ab; SvT 4.522ab (yāgaṃ saṃhareta); PicM-BY f.210v3 (yāgaṃ ...aśeṣam tatra vinyaset); Kriyādikā quoted at SomSPaddh 3, p. 161 (yāge visarjite); Abhinavagupta, TSāra p. 191 (upasaṃhṛte yāge).

(3) Cf. KulRatnU f.79r: śabdarāśiś ca mālinyā vidyānām tritayasya ca / sāṅgopāṅgasamā-yuktam(ā) trikatantram kariṣyati // The verse is ungrammatical; but the probable sense is, '[Śiva] will produce the scripture(s) of the Trika equipped with Śabdarāśi, Mālinī, and the three Vidyās [Parā, Parāparā and Aparā] together with their divisions and subdivisions.'

(4) MSS: NAK 5/2403; ASB 5465 (G).

1.2.2. Three other major forms of the Trika are accessible to us. These are those of the Devyāyāmala, the Triśirobhairava, and the Tantrasadbhāva. Of these āgamas only the last survives in its entirety.⁵ The first and the second can be studied only through various quotations and reports in the Kashmirian literature, particularly in the Tantrāloka and its commentary (the -viveka of Jayaratha). There are also materials closely related to both the Devyāyāmala and the Triśirobhairava, but particularly to the former, in the Jayadrathayāmala (/Tantrārāja[-bhaṭṭāraka]).⁶

1.2.3. To these systems we must add that of the Anuttara, Ekavīra, or Parākrama. Distinguished by these names from the Trika proper it reduces the latter's yāga to the first of the two alphabet-deities and the goddess Parā, or else to Parā alone. Its scriptural basis, the short Parātriṃśikā, has come down to us with extensive exegesis, most notably with two commentaries by Abhinavagupta, the long -vivarāṇa and the short [laghu-] vṛtti.

2. PARĀ

2.0. It appears from Abhinavagupta that the main source of the Trika's deity visualizations (dhyānāni) was the Siddhaya-geśvarimata.⁷ Some relevant material appears, as we shall see, in the short redaction of this work which survives; but what we find there and in the other sources that remain does not amount to a complete description of the system's icons.

2.1.1. I have found fully detailed visualizations only in the case of Parā, the highest of the three goddesses; and these come not from any of the āgamas of the Trika or even from Kashmir, but from the post-scriptural literature of the Anuttara cult in the form in which it was practised in the Tamil-speaking region in the far south of the subcontinent. Thus the Parātriṃśikātātparyadīpikā, a verse commen-

(5) MSS: NAK 5/445 (AD 1097); 1/363; 5/1985.

(6) This work, the largest surviving Śaiva āgama (24,000 śloka in four ṣaṭkas), was current in Kashmir in the time of our commentators (AD 950 +) and was redacted, if not entirely composed, in that region; see my forthcoming 'The Date and Provenance of the Jayadrathayāmala tantra.'

(7) PTViv 278, 10-13 (265, 18-266, 4): ... siddhaditantrādividhim eva tadāśayenaiva nirūpitataddhyānādisaṃkocam ālambatām.

tary on the Parātriṃśikālaghuvṛtti of Abhinavagupta, has the following invocation as its second verse:⁸

May the Supreme Power [Parā] protect you, [she who is as brilliantly white] as a markless moon, three-eyed, adorned with the crescent moon [upon her hair], her [two] hands showing the gesture (mudrā) and the book.

2.1.2. That this work is south Indian is evident from the facts that its author records that it was composed "in the city of the Lord of the Hall of Consciousness" (pure citparīṣatpateḥ), that is to say, in the temple-city of Cidambaram;⁹ that he mentions that city with Kashmir, Banaras and Kailāsa as one of four centres of the Trika;¹⁰ and that he looks upon the Śiva Lord of Dancers (Naṭarāja) who is the deity of its temple as embodying the Trika's dynamic non-duality of consciousness.¹¹

2.2. The same verse is found as the visualization text for Parā in the form of Anuttara worship (Parākrama) followed in the cult of the goddess Lalitā (/Tripurasundarī) centred on the south Indian city of Kāñcī (Kāñcīpuram).¹² In that cult, as prescribed in the Paraśurāmakalpasūtra, Parā is worshipped as Lalitā's 'heart' (hrdayam).¹³

2.3. A hymn to Parā (Parāstutiḥ) attributed to one Sahajānan-danātha and recited at the end of the cult in that tradition identifies the 'gesture' (mudrā) of the visualization verse as that of Consciousness (cinmudrā), and assigns it to the goddess's right hand:¹⁴

(8) PTTātpD 2: akalankaśaśāṅkabhā tryakṣā candrakalāvati / mudrāpustalasadbāhā pātu vah paramā kalā //.

(9) PTTātpD 531d. See also ibid. 535c: saṃviṣṭasannabhomaḍhye (emending the edition's savisāsannabhomaḍhye). For the Hall of Consciousness (citsabhā, citparīṣat, saṃviṣṭasamsal) at Cidambaram containing the space-linga (ākāśalingam) and the idol of Śiva Lord of Dancers (Naṭarāja) see, e.g., Kulke 1970, 140 and Plate 3.

(10) PTTātpD 3: śrīmatkailāśakaśmirakāśīvyāghrapuristhitam / trikārthadarśinaṃ vande devam somāśabhūṣanam //. Vyāghrapurī (< the old Tamil Puliyūr ['Place of the Tiger']) = Cidambaram; see Kulke 1970, 32.

(11) PTTātpD 532-536. At 536b I propose to emend tvaṇanodyogaśālinah to naṭano-dyogaśālinah.

(12) ParaśurKS khaṇḍa 8 (Anuttarapaddhati / Parākrama), 20; Nityots 193, 15-16; 195, 17; MahātripV 171, 6-7. These have pātu mām where PTTātpD has pātu vah. Variants are also seen at ŚVidyārṇV 58, 31-32 (/MahātripV 34, 1-2) in the parāsaṃputitāmātrkānyāsah (la-sadbāhuṃ prāṇamāmi parām kalām) and PrapañcSPKD 589, 21-22 (muktāmaṇivibhūṣitām for the last pāda).

(13) ParaśurKS 8.1: ... siṃhāsanaavidyāhrdayam anuttaram parābījarūpam ...; Rāmeśvara's commentary ad loc.: ... yā vidyā sā tripurasundarī lalitā tasyāḥ hrdayam hrdayarūpam; Nityots 190, 5: parā śrīhrdayātmikā.

(14) Nityots 196, verse 5: bhaktajanabhedabhañjanacinmudrākalitadakṣapāñītalām / pūrnāhantākāraṇapustakavaryena ruciravāmakarām //.

Her right hand is adorned with the Consciousness-gesture which destroys duality in [the minds of] her devotees, and her left hand displays [a bound manuscript of] the Supreme Scripture which is the means of attaining the [liberated] state of all-including I-ness.

This detail is also given in a description of Parā in the Lalitopā-khyāna, a Purāṇic work devoted to the praise (māhātmyam) of the Kāñci Lalitā cult,¹⁵ and in the Ahīrbudhnyasamhitā, a south Indian work of the Vaiṣṇava Pañcarātra composed in the eleventh century in a milieu strongly influenced by the Trika.¹⁶ The gesture is formed by showing the palm at the level of the heart with the thumb and the index finger joined to form a circle.¹⁷

2.4. Sahajānanda's hymn also tells us that Parā is to be visualized within a lunar disc,¹⁸ wearing a necklace of pearls, pearl earrings, and a garment of spotless white linen.¹⁹

2.5.1. The Rahasyapañcadaśikā adds the option that Parā may be visualized holding a pen (lekhaṇī) in her right hand instead of showing the gesture.²⁰

2.5.2. The attribution of this work to Abhinavagupta is certainly false: it too is probably a south Indian work.²¹

(15) BrahṃP (Lalitop) 39.9-10: ādyā yānuttarā(? yānutarā) sā syāc citparā tu ādikāraṇam / anākhyeti(? antākhyeti) tathā proktā svarūpa(svarūpāt)tattvacintakāḥ // 9 // duitiābhūt tataḥ śuddhparā duibhujasamyutā / dakṣahaste yogamudrām vāmahaste tu pustakam // 10 // bibhratī himakundendumuktāsamavapurdyutiḥ / parāparā trītiyā syād...

(16) AhīrbS 24.16: pūrṇenduśīṭalarucir dhṛtabodhamudrā bāhvantarasthanijabodhanapustakādhyā / devī parā paramapūruṣādīvyasaktiś cintyā prasannavadanā sarasīruhākṣī // Schrader (1916: 96-99) dated this work to some time between AD 300 and 700, and considered it to have been written in Kashmir. For proofs that it is a southern work of the eleventh century see my forthcoming 'The Date and Provenance of the Lakṣmītantra and the Ahīrbudhnyasamhitā.'

(17) ŚārTilPā 358, 21-23: ... jñānamudrā aṅguṣṭhatarjanīyogariṇī pārsvābhīmukhi...; JñānārṇT 4.40c-41b: tarjanyaṅguṣṭhayoge tu dakṣahaste tu pārvatī // 40 // akṣamāleti mudreyam jñānamudrā ca vai bhavet /

(18) Nityots 196, verse 2: ānandacaraṇakamalām akalāṅkaśaśāṅkamaṇḍalacchāyām / tanmaṇḍalādhīrūdhām tatkalyāṇa kalitacitkalām naumi // Also RahPañc 24b: candramaṇḍalāntasthe (voc.).

(19) Nityots 196, verse 4ab: mauktikamaṇḍanagarucirām śaśāṅkanirmokanirmalam kṣaumat / nivasānām paramēśīm namāmi...; 6cd: mauktikatāṇkābhyaṃ maṇḍitamukhamaṇḍalām parām naumi //

(20) RahPañc 23cd: hastayugmadhṛtapustatūlikām bālikām paricīnomi tām parām // 32c: līlāpustakalekhinidhārakārā ciccandrabimbāsthītā. The basic dhyāna is at 21: dordvandvasamkalitāpustakabodhamudre ... (voc.).

(21) The Rahasyapañcadaśikā has been tentatively included among the works of Abhinavagupta by Pandey (1963:71, 74-75; 954-56 [text]). He notes that the attribution is doubtful because the MS he transcribes contains 37 verses while the final verse, which

2.6. In this same context, namely the visualization of Parā in the regular (niyatakālam [nityam]) and compulsory (niyatakaraṇīyam [nityam]) form of the cult, the short Siddhayogeśvarīmata and the Mālinīvijayottara do not provide the details needed for a complete dhyāna. They tell us only that the goddess is as white as the moon or crystal and that she nourishes the universe by pouring forth the nectar of life.²² However the first of these sources is more forthcoming when it teaches the visualization of Parā in the yogic meditations which may be practised by sādhakas for specific, nontranscendental goals. Two such meditations are found in the text: (i) for the defeat of death (mṛtyuñjayasāadhanam), and (ii) for the mastery of the poet's art and the attainment of all knowledge (kavītasāadhanam, sarvajñatvasāadhanam).²³

In the first the sādhaka visualizes a white, eight-petaled lotus above his head, with the moon's disc as its centre. He then visualizes Parā in the centre of this disc pouring forth nectar which enters through the aperture in his cranium (the brahmarandhram) and fills his body. As for the details of her form, we are told only that she is white.²⁴ In the second Parā is to be contemplated in much the same manner. She is described as seated within a lotus above the sādhaka pouring forth nectar; but now it is the nectar of omniscontains the attribution, refers to a text of only 15 verses (37cd: ime 'bhinavaguptena ślokaḥ pañcadaśoditāḥ). But there are other reasons for rejecting the attribution. Verse 34 contains the non-Abhinavaguptan but Advaitavedāntist terminology of sat, cīd, and ānanda (35a: sadaṃśam cīdaṃśe cīdaṃśam mudamśe) and the distribution of the letters of the alphabet on (/as) the body of Sarasvatī in verse 1 is not that of Abhinavagupta's Trika (see TĀ 15. 117c - 120c), but that of the south Indian smṛta tradition of the Prapañcasāra (see PrapañcS 7.3; Nityots 94, 1-15).

(22) SiYogM 6.27c-28 (f. 11r1-2): karnikāyām nyased devīm parā <m> ekākṣarām śubhām // utkr((kri)śasphaṭikaprakhyām samantād amṛtastavām / āpyāyanakarīm devīm par <ā> m siddhipradāyikām(āt) //; cf. Siddhayogeśvarīmata quoted at TĀV 9 (15) 167, 4-6: tasyāḥ śikhāgre vinyasyet parām ekākṣarām śubhām / utkrśasphaṭikaprakhyām samantād amṛtasravām // āpyāyanakarīm devīm parām siddhipradāyikām / MāVijUT 8.74cd: parām cāpyāyanīm devīm candrakotyayutaprabhām //

(23) These are taught in SiYogM paṭalas 11 and 12.

(24) SiYogM 11.3c-12: *mṛtyuñjayaṃ samāsenā kathyamānam śṛṇu priye // ākāśa <m> bhūtanīlayam tatra padmākṛtīm smaret / dalāśjakasamopetam karnikādhī(di)sthitam sitam // svacchasphaṭika(? prakṛti)samkāśam prāleyāvanisam nibham / sarvāmṛtamayaṃ divyaṃ candrakalpitakarnikam // tādrśenaiva rūpeṇa bhūpadmaṃ tu manoramam / tasmīṃś caivopaviśtas tu samyag nyāsakṛtas tataḥ // prā(a)leyābhām lato' - tmānam śuddhasphaṭikasa(sam)prabhām / evam vicintya-m(n)-ātmānam paścād dhyānam vicintayet // vyomapadme tu yac candram karnikāyām vyavasthitam / ta <t> sthām vicintayed devīm parā <m> surabhirūpiṇīm // vacchasphaṭikasaprakhyām samantād amṛtasravā(a)m / sravanti sāmṛtaṃ (? sravantiśāmayam) divyaṃ mantra(yanta)jnādāntasarpīṇi <m> // sā śakti <r> devadevasya paramātmā-(a)mṛtavahīni / sā sravanti(nlm) param kṣīram yat tat satyam sunirmalam // tat patad dhyā(?) ntya)tmāno mūrtau(tīm) samantāc ca vicintayet / viśa <d> brahmābīle bhāṅhyo plāvayed dhṛd-(hṛm)guhāśrayam(yāt) // evam pratidinam dhyāyey jape mantrottamottamam / śaṃśāsāj jn(v)ate mṛtyum iti śāstraśya nīśayah(m) //*

cience, and he is to imagine it first entering his mouth and then emerging from it. We are also told that she is to be visualized within a grove of kadamba trees (Nauclea Cadamba), holding the Book of All Wisdom in her left hand and a rosary of crystal in her right, and wearing a long necklace of the same substance.²⁵

2.7.1. The essentials of this sādhana are also found in the Prapañcasāra attributed to Śaṅkara, in the chapter on the cult of the goddess Tripurabhairavī (one of the basic forms of Tripurasundarī):²⁶

If he meditates on the last of the three seed-syllables he will be free of the danger of reincarnation after his death and will win the favour of the [goddess of] Eloquence-and-Learning. He must visualize a lotus [in his heart] and this [syllable] gleaming white as the moon or jasmine in its centre. He must then visualize the goddess of the syllable holding a book and a rosary, then imagine the alphabet pouring forth from her mouth again and again, [rising up from his heart] and emerging from his mouth in an unbroken stream.

The goddess in this visualization is certainly identical with the Trika's Parā. For the seed-syllable which she embodies in this meditation is hsrauḥ, the third in the tripartite mantra of Tripurabhairavī (hsraiṃ-hsklṛīm-hsrauḥ).²⁷ It is therefore equivalent to sauḥ, the seed-syllable of Parā in the Trika;²⁸ for this hsraiṃ-hsklṛīm-hsrauḥ is an inflection of aiṃ-kliṃ-sauḥ, the matrix mantra in the Tripurasundarī cult.²⁹

(25) SiYogM 12.4-11: dhyātvā parāṃ svarūpeṇa(jāyeṇa) vyomapadmāsane sthitām / vāmahaste niviṣṭena sarvajñānamayena tu // pustakena varārohe dakṣiṇe <na> tataḥ punaḥ / sphāṭikenā(cā)kṣasūtreṇa divyena pravareṇa tu // kadambagolakākāraiḥ sthūlajvālāvalidharaiḥ / granthitāṃ divyarpā(a)ṃ tu mālā <m> hi gala(tī)saṃsthitām // āpādalambanī cāsau sphāṭikābhā samantataḥ / srauantīm amṛtaṃ divyaṃ kadambavanamadyogām // udgiranti- <m> mahā-oghāi <h> sarvajñānamayaṃ tataḥ / mukhe svake viśad(m) dhyāye <t> tad-rūpaṃ(āś) caivam ātmanaḥ // evaṃ kṛtvā tataḥ paścāt svavaktrāc <c> amṛtaṃ mahān / oghaiś caiva tu śāstrāṇāṃ cintayet sādhanakottamaḥ // evaṃ dhyānaṃ prayuñjita talas tasya(taśca) prajāyate / kavītuṃ māsamātreṇa sālankāra <n> manoharam // jāyate niścitam devi sarvārthapratipādakam / śadbhi <r> māsaiḥ(e) svayaṃ kartā śāstrāṇāṃ jāyate tu saḥ //

(26) PrapañcS 9.42: antyam bijam athendukundaviśadam saṃcintya cittāmbuje tadbhūtāṃ dhṛtapustakākṣavalayam devīm muḥus tanmukhāt / udyantaṃ nikhilākṣaram nijamukhenānāratasrotasā niryāntam ca nirastasaṃstibhaya bhūyāt sa vāgvalabhah //

(27) See PrapañcS 9.3 and ŚārTil 12.3-5 for the udhāra of this mantra of Tripurabhairavī. For her visualization see, e.g., PrapañcS 9.8 and ŚārTil 12.31. She is close to Parā in that she shows the gesture of knowledge and the rosary with her principal hands, and the two common or supplementary gestures of protection and generosity with the other two. But she is red, wears a garland of severed heads, and her breasts are smeared with blood. A drawing of this goddess is given in PuraścArṇ. dhyeyadevatācitrāṇi, p. 23.

(28) The Nityāśoḍaśikāraṇa, the root-āgama of this cult, is conscious of this identity: śaktibhje parā śaktir icchaiva śivārūpiṇī (4.18ab).

(29) JñānārṇT paṭalas 6-9 and ŚVidyārṇT 115a20-119b13. See also ŚārTilPā 10, 5-6 concerning Bālā (aiṃ-kliṃ-sauḥ): [tripura]bhairavādinām api sa eva [mantra] mūlabhūtaḥ.

2.7.2. The south Indian literature of the Tripurasundarī cult, (mainly commentaries and manuals, but also in the case of the Yoginīhrdaya, scripture itself³⁰), was permeated by the non-dualism of the Kashmirian exegetes of the Trika. Here we see that the influence of the Trika goes right back to the very formation of this cult, since the mantras are inevitably the most basic constituents of any Tantric system. Like the Kubjikā cult it has incorporated and inflected elements central to the Trika.³¹

2.7.3. It has incorporated not merely the mantra but also the two specific functions which are associated with its *sādhana*s in the Siddhayogeśvarimata: the defeat of death and the granting of eloquence and knowledge. We have just seen its application to the second of these goals in the Prapañcasāra. Its application to the first is evident in the mantras Mr̥tasamjivani [Parā] ('Parā Who-restores-the-dead-to-life') and Mr̥tyuñjayaparā ('Parā-as-conqueror-of-death') which occur among the Throne-goddesses (siṃhāsana-devyaḥ) of Tripurasundarī in the Kalimata subsystem taught in the Dakṣināmūrtisamhitā.³² The second of these carries the book and the rosary, like the Parā taught for eloquence and learning in the Siddhayogeśvarimata and the Prapañcasāra.³³ The first too is white and two-armed; but instead of the book and the gesture or the book and the rosary she has the rosary and the gesture.³⁴

2.8.1. As I have shown elsewhere, the influence of the Trika is even more pervasive in the case of the cult of Kubjikā.³⁵ The Kubjikāmata, the root text of the cult, also incorporated the Trika's meditation on Parā for the attainment of eloquence. The goddess is described there as white and two-armed, displaying all three of the hand-attributes seen in the variants above, since the hand that holds

(30) For evidence that the Yoginīhrdaya is south Indian see my forthcoming 'Dualism and Non-dualism in the Tantras.'

(31) For evidence that the Trika predates the cults of Kubjikā and Tripurasundarī see my arguments at CNRS 1986, 164-65 and Sanderson 1988, 687-88.

(32) Mr̥tasamjivani: hrīm haṃ saḥ samjivani jūm haṃ saḥ kuru kuru sauḥ sauḥ svāhā; see ŚVidyārṇT 118a31-32. Mr̥tyuñjayaparā: vada vada vāgūadini hsaīm klinne kledini mahākṣobham kuru kuru hsrīm om mokṣam kuru kuru hsauḥ; see ibid. 118b10-11. The seed-syllable hsauḥ is an ectype of Parā's sauḥ in the Trika itself; see TĀV 12 (31) 188, 13-14 (quoting the Triśirobhairava).

(33) See ŚVidyārṇT 11b18-19 (Dakṣināmūrtisamhitā): pustakam vāmahastena dakṣiṇanākṣasūtrakam / bibhratiṃ kundadhavalām kumārīm cintayet parām //

(34) See ŚVidyārṇT 118b1-2 (Dakṣināmūrtisamhitā): karpūrābhām hīramuktābhūṣanair bhūṣitāmarām / jñānamudrām akṣamālām dadhatiṃ cintayet parām //

(35) See my evidence at CNRS 1986, 163-64, Goudriaan and Schoterman 1988, xii (> 14-24, 488-96).

the rosary does so in the gesture of consciousness (cinmudrā).³⁶ However, this deviation is superficial, since the rosary and the gesture are synonymous.³⁷

2.8.2. In a series of Newar ink drawings of Tantric deities belonging to this cult we see a representation of the six-faced, twelve armed Kubjikā in the embrace of her dancing consort, the ten-armed, five-faced Navātman. Beneath this is a drawing of a four-armed goddess showing the book in her outer left hand, the rosary and the gesture of consciousness in the outer right, and the common or supplementary gestures of protection and generosity in her inner left and right. The manuscript identifies her as Kubjikeśvari. This tells us no more than that she is some form of the system's principal deity; but she is probably to be seen as an elaboration of the two-armed form just discussed.³⁸

2.8.3. Also related is the one-faced, four-armed form of Kubjikā taught in the Kubjikāmata and the Nityāhnikatilaka as one of two alternatives to the six-faced, twelve-armed icon which is the goddess's principal form. According to the first source she carries a book, pot (kamaṇḍaluḥ) and rosary, and shows the gesture of generosity.³⁹ According to the second, she shows the gestures of protection and generosity, and holds a rosary and a pot.⁴⁰

(36) KubjM 6.30c-33: cakramadhye ca saṃcintya suśuklāṃ ca parāparām // pustaka-vyagrahastām ca jñānamudrādharaṃ tathā / sphāṭikenākṣasūtreṇa sarvābharanabhūṣitām // sragdāmalambitaḥ prabhāmaṇḍalamāṇḍitām / dvibāhu-ekavadanām candrakotyaṇḍitaprabhām // udgiran-tī <m> mahaughena śāstrakoṭīr anekāśaḥ / evaṃdhyānasamāviṣṭaḥ sākṣād vāgīśvaro bhavet / Cf. the visualization text of the SiYogM quoted above, n. 25. The expression parāparām in this passage does not mean that the Trika goddess here is Parāparā rather than Parā. The anonymous commentary on the long redaction of the Kubjikāmata, the ŚaṭsāhTipp, glosses it with sthūlasūksmām '[both] gross and subtle' (f. 46v4). It also explains, ibid., how the goddess shows the three attributes with only two hands: jñānamudrāvalambanena sphāṭikākṣasūtrahastena...

(37) When the worshippers of Tripurasundarī show the mudrās of the goddess's hands during their regular cult (nityakarma) they show the jñānamudrā (/cinmudrā, bodhamudrā) twice: once for the hand that shows this gesture and once for the hand that holds the rosary.
The jñānamudrā and the akṣasūtramudrā are thus synonymous; see JñānārṇT 4.40c-41b quoted above, n. 17. The gesture of consciousness/wisdom suggests the presence of the rosary in the hand that shows it. The KubjM's icon makes this presence explicit.

(38) Reproduced in Rawson 1978, 19 without identification. The connection of these drawings with the cult of Kubjikā, but not their precise identities, was first pointed out by Schoeterman (1982: 10, n. 7, acknowledging K.R. van Kooy).

(39) KubjM 17.18: kaumārakramamadyasthā ekavaktrā caturbhujā / pustaka-maṇḍaludharā akṣasūtravaraṇāpradā //

(40) NityāhñTil f. 28v4-29r1: yuvākramo yathā: ekavaktrā caturbhujā abhayavaradākṣamālākamaṇḍaludharā //

2.8.4. In the Kularatnoddya an expanded version of this alternative dhyāna is prescribed. The goddess is five-faced and ten-armed. She shows the gestures of generosity, protection, and knowledge (jñāna-mudrā), and holds a book and a rosary, a noose and a goad, a bow and a cluster of five arrows, and a skull-cup filled with wine.⁴¹ She appears to fuse an elaboration of the Trika's Parā with Tripurasundarī; for the noose, goad, bow and five arrows are the hallmark of the latter.⁴²

2.8.5. Parā appears in another variant in the [Kubjikā]-Nityāhnikati-laka. There she is to be visualized emerging from her seed-syllable, white, seated on a bull, showing the gesture, the trident and lotus (or lotuses).⁴³ We are not told how many hands the goddess has. If the lotus is a separate hand-attribute, then the text remains silent on at least one hand, their number always being even. We do not need to assume, however, that she has more than two hands; for the ambiguous compound śūlābja- may refer not to a trident and a single lotus but to three lotuses visualized on the cusps of the trident itself as the thrones of deities. Such a design is seen in the basic initiation maṇḍala of the Trika (the [tri]śūlābjamaṇḍala).⁴⁴ That the deity should hold such a trident is also paralleled: the Siddhayogeśvarī-mata teaches a yāga in which Parā, Parāparā and Aparā (the three goddesses who are enthroned on the lotuses on the tips of the trident in the maṇḍala) are to be installed on the three cusps of a trident visualized in the hand of Bhairava.⁴⁵ That a form of Parā should be visualized carrying a trident which enthrones not only the other two goddesses but also herself might appear illogical and therefore implausible. In fact it is entirely appropriate, since the goddess here

(41) KulRatnU f. 66r (... yuvākrame).

(42) See, e.g., Nityāṣoḍ 1.130 - 146. A finely executed painting in the Kangra style of Tripurasundarī seated in a pavilion on the prostate body of Sadaśiva is reproduced in Rawson 1973, 124 (Ill. 105: "Mahavidya icon").

(43) NityāhñTil f. 42v3-4: ... tadudbhavām / mūrti <m> śuklām vṛṣasthitām vyākhyāśūlābjadhāriṇīm / tattvatrayamayī <m> devīm jaṭākhaṇḍenduśekharā <m> / The word vyākhyā in this passage = vyākhyānamudrā, 'the gesture of text-exposition.' Presumably this = cinmudrā here.

(44) For the exact outline of this maṇḍala drawn following the instructions of the Mālinīvijayottara see Sanderson 1986, 171.

(45) SiYogM 25.44c-49b: tatas tu kṣatajam grhya vāmāṅgād uttamād budhaḥ // bhairavayāḥ sahitaṃ devaṃ bhairavaṃ pūrva(r)avarnitām / śaṅkhamadhye likheda vidvān triśūlām(e) dakṣiṇe kare // jvālāyā "nmāca" samkṣaṣaṃ tribhiḥ śṛṅgaiḥ (tribhisyaṅgaiḥ) sujāvalam / bhairavisaṅkṣaṃ devaṃ pūrvavac cāsane sthitam // triśūlasthām parām devīm tathā caiva parāparām / aparām devadeveśī(e) yajet pūrvavad eva hi // dakṣiṇe caiva śūlāgre nyased devīm parāparām / ekonaiś(akākāraiś) ca śubhair varṇaiś catvāriṃśaṭ(ur) eva hi / vāme sārdhatrivarnenaiḥkārṇām(?atyarṇe) madhye parām nyaset /

is not simply Parā but the icon of the Trividyā, a mantra peculiar to the Kubjikā cult, which runs together all three of the mantras (Parā, Parāparā and Aparā) into a single whole.⁴⁶

2.9. According to the Piṅgalāmata, a Śaiva āgama of the Bhairava canon dealing with the installation (pratiṣṭhā) of idols and other substrates of worship,⁴⁷ all three of the Trika's goddesses when painted as a group are to carry tridents. According to the same source they must be three-faced.⁴⁸ This unusual feature is shared with, and may have been derived from, the Trika goddesses of the lost Triśirobhairava. No visualization texts from that text are quoted in our literature; but the title ('[The Tantra of] Bhairava the Three-headed') and a section of the Jayadrathayāmala suggest this. The section in question is clearly based on the Triśirobhairava system and it teaches that Parā Triśirṣā should be visualized with this feature.⁴⁹

2.10.1. There are also four-armed forms of Parā. The Trikaśāra teaches an icon of this kind, though without telling us what implements or gestures her hands display. She is said to be white, four-armed, four-faced, and surrounded by her standard retinue: the twelve Yoginis who embody the 'fertile' vowels (a, ā, i, ī, u, ū, e, ai, o, au, am [anusvāra], and aḥ [visarga]).⁵⁰ The purpose of the cult is the attainment of eloquence and learning.⁵¹

2.10.2. Here too the literature of the cult of Tripurasundarī shows parallels. The Saundaryalaharī, a work which, like the Prapañcasāra, is attributed to Śaṅkara, praises without name a white, four-armed manifestation of the goddess who holds a crystal rosary and a book, and shows the common gestures (of protection [abhaya mudrā] and generosity [varadamudrā]), saying that her cult bestows 'sweetness

(46) See below, nn. 73 and 74.

(47) For the place and scope of this important text see my forthcoming 'Dualism and Non-dualism in the Tantras.' MSS: NAK 3 / 376 (AD 1169/70); 5 / 1929; British Library MS Or. 2279 (AS 1193/94).

(48) PiṅM 5.37c-38b: parādyāḥ śūlahastās tu triśirās(as) tu tripadmake / svaśāstroka-tyāthavā likhya cakrasamsthātha pañktigāḥ //.

(49) JayadYāmT 4, ff. 187v3-199r3. See also below, n. 127.

(50) TĀV 2 (3) 236, 6-7: parām tv ekākṣarām madhye śaṅkhakundendusundarām / caturbhujām caturvaktṛām yoginidvādaśāvṛtām //.

(51) TĀV 2 (3) 236, 15 qu. the Trikaśāra: athātaḥ sampravakṣyāmi vāgvidhānam anuttamam //.

of speech.'⁵² There is also a four-armed Parā in the second of the two functions, namely the conquest of death, which is taught for the sādhana of the third seed-syllable of the mantra of Tripurasundarī in the Jñānārṇava and the Kaulāvalīnirṇaya.⁵³ She is to be visualized holding a jar full of lunar nectar and showing the gestures of consciousness, generosity and protection.⁵⁴

2.10.3. Finally there is the four-armed deity who embodies the mantras Prāsādaparā (hsaumḥ) and Parāprāsāda (s-haumḥ), variants of the Trika's Parā (sauḥ), at the centre of the Kaula system of the Kulārṇavatāntṛa.⁵⁵ This deity, who may be visualized as male (= Śiva), female (= Śakti), or as both in one body (Ardhanārīśvara), shows the gesture of consciousness and carries the book, the drinking vessel (pānapātram), and the trident.⁵⁶

(52) SaundLah 15: śarajyotsnāśubhrām śaśiyutajaṭājūṭamakūṭām varatrāsatrāṇasphaṭ-ikaguṭikāpustakakarām / sakṛn na tvā natvā katham iva satām samnidadhate madhuksīradrāks-āmadhurinā bhaṇitayāḥ // This visualization is illustrated in the Baroda MS; see ibid. p. 178, plate 10a. The commentator Lakṣmidhara has the reading sphaṭikaghaṭikā in the second pāda. He takes it to mean 'crystal cup' (sphaṭikapānapātram); see SaundLahL 104,4; also LaghSt 7 and AmbSt 14.

(53) JñānārṇT 19.28c-34b (= KaulāvN 16.150-56). The verses elaborate a passage in the Nityāśoḍaśikāṇava (4.47-50), which teaches an aniconic sādhana of this syllable.

(54) JñānārṇT 19.29b-31c (= KaulāvN 16.150d-52): ... śarīre cintayet parām / sravatpiyū-śadhārābhīr varāntīm viśahārīṇīm // hemaprabhābhāsamānām vidyunnikarasuprabhām / sphuraccandrakalāpūrnakalāśam varadābhayau // jñānamudrām ca dadhatīm sāksād amṛtarūpīṇīm //.

(55) For these two seed-syllables see KulārṇT 4.4-5b: ananta(= h)-candra(= s)-bhuva-nam(= au) indu(= ṁ)-binduyugānvitāḥ (= + h) / śrīprāsādaparāmantro bhuktimuktiphalapradah // parāprāsāsamantras tu sādīr (= s-haumḥ) uktaḥ kuleśvari /; also MahātripV 256, 26-28. On the extraordinary combination mḥ see ŚārTilPĀ 10, 22-23: bālāyā mantrabhedeṣu kvacid binduḥ kvacid visargaḥ kvacid binduvisargāu apy uddhṛtau.

(56) KulārṇT 4.112c-113b: pānapātram ca cinmudrām triśūlam pustakam karaiḥ // vidyāsamśiddhiṁ bibhṛnām sadānandamukheṣānām //.

2.11.

2.11. Table. Visualizations of Parā.

SOURCE	COLOUR	FACES	ARMS	RIGHT	LEFT
PITātDīp ParaśurKS RahPañc (1) Sahajānanda Lalitop AhirbSam	White	1	2	Gesture of Consciousness (G of C)	Book
RahPañc (2)	White	1	2	Pen	Book
SiYogM PrapañcS DakṣMSam (1)	White	1	2	Crystal Rosary (CRos)	Book
DakṣMSam (2)	White	1	2	CRos	G of C
KubjM	White	1	2	CRos, G of C	Book
NityāhnTil	White	1	-	G of C	Trident-and lotuses
PiṅgM	White	3	-	-	Trident
Trikaśāra	White	4	4	-	-
SaundLah	White	1	4	CRos Protection	Book Generosity
JñānārṇT KaulāvN	? ⁵⁷	1	4	G of C Protection	Jar of Nectar Generosity
KulārṇT	-	1	4	G of C Cup of Nectar	Book Trident

(57) Her colour is not stated precisely. She is said to be radiant with the lustre of gold and to resemble a mass of lightning (JñānārṇT 19. 30ab [= KaulāvN 16. 151cd]; hema-prabhābhāsamānām vidyunnikarasuprabhām). She might therefore be thought to be golden. However, according to the commentator Vidyānanda (see NityāśoḍARĀ 247²¹ and 248¹⁴), the Śakti of the seed-syllable is white in the aniconic visualization (taught at Nityāśoḍ 4.47) which is the substratum of this icon.

3. PARĀ AND SARASVATĪ

3.0. Her colour, her association with eloquence and learning, and, above all, the attributes of her hands, show that Parā is an ectype of the goddess Sarasvatī, more precisely of Sarasvatī as embodiment of the Word (Vāgīśvarī) or, which is the same conception, of the alphabet (Mātrkāśarasvatī, Lipidevī).

3.1. Thus the Mātrkāśarasvatī of the Prapañcasāra and the closely related Śāradātilaka shows the gesture of consciousness, carries the book, the rosary and the jar or skull-cup of nectar;⁵⁸ and the equivalent goddess of the Agnipurāṇa and other texts, known as Lipidevī or Vāgīśvarī, carries the book, the rosary, the jar, and a lotus.⁵⁹ The Sarasvatī of the Kashmirian Viṣṇudharmottarapurāṇa (3.73.25) carries the rosary, the book, the water-jar (kamaṇḍaluḥ) and the trident;⁶⁰ the many-armed Vidyāvidyeśvarī form of Sarasvatī taught in the Jayadrathayāmala holds the Book of All Knowledge and the crystal rosary in her two principal (i.e. innermost) hands, and like Parā, she is to be visualized pouring forth nectar from her

(58) PrapañcS 7.3: pañcāśadvarṇabhedair vihitavadanadoḥpādayukkuṣivakṣodeśām bhāsvatkapardākaliṭāśaśikālām indukundāvadātām / akṣasrakkumbhacintālikhitavarakarām trikaśānām padmasamsthām acchākalpām atucchastanajaghanabharām bhāratīm tām namāmi // According to PrapañcSPKD ad loc. (535. 24-25) cintā here = vyākhyāna [= jñāna]-mudrā and likhitavara = pustakavara; cf. Nityots 196, verse 5 quoted at n. 14 above. But this interpretation of the verse is not universal. Umānandanātha gives it as the visualization text in the installation of the Alphabet (mātrkānyāsaḥ) at Nityots 94, 1-5; but he takes cintālikhitavara quite differently. He divides the compound into cintālikhita- and vara- and interprets these as the book of knowledge and the gesture of generosity. He is not alone. He could have cited ŚVidyārṇT 232, 12-13, which is clearly based on this verse of PrapañcS and takes it in the same way: ... akṣasrakkumbhaśobhitām / cintālikhitasatpānīm samagravaradāyiniṁ // There is also ŚārTil's visualization of Lipitanu-Vāgīśvarī ('The Goddess of the Word, whose body is the Alphabet'); see 7.14cd: bibhrānām anīṣam varijāpavatiṁ vidyām kapālam karaiḥ // This is the dhyāna of Antarmātrkā according to MahātripV 51, 1-17. It too is based on PrapañcS 7.3 in the second interpretation. The first interpretation, however, is the source of the dhyāna of Vāgīśvarī at ŚārTil 6.4: pañcāśallipibhir vimuktamukhadohpanmadhyavakṣaḥ-sthalām bhāsvanmaulinibaddhacandraśakālām āpinaturigastanīm / mudrām akṣaguṇam sudhādhyakalāśam vidyām [i.e. pustakam] ca hastāmbujair bibhrānām viśadaprabhām trinayanām vāgdevatām āśraye // ĪśānŚGDPaddh MP 17.64cd is also based on the first interpretation: sabodhamudrapustakām sakumbhajāpyamālikām sitāmbarādibhūṣitām sitāvṛtiṁ numo giram //

(59) AgnP 293.51: lipidevī sākṣasūtrakumbhapustakapadmadhrk / kavitvādi prayacchet...; AgnikPaddh f.71r 8-13: dorbhir yuktām caturbhiḥ sphatikamaṇimayīm akṣamālām dadhānām hastenaikena padmam sitam api caṣakam pustakam cāparena / yā sā kundenādu-śāṅkhasphatikamaṇinibhā bhāsamānāsamānā sā me vāgdevateyaṁ nivasatu vadane sarvadā suprasannā //

(60) ViṣṇDhUP 3.73.25: caturbhujā tu kartavyā tathā devī sarasvatī / akṣamālā trīśūlam ca pustakam ca kamaṇḍalum /...

mouth into the sādhaka's;⁶¹ and Dūtī, the 'mother of mantras' (mantramātā) who is worshipped as the goddess of the bell rung in Tantric ritual, carries the book and rosary, and shows the gestures of protection and generosity.⁶²

3.2. Of these various hand-attributes of Sarasvatī the principal are the book and the rosary, the two items held by the Parā of the Siddhayogeśvarīmata.⁶³ It is because these are the fundamental attributes that they are held by Sarasvatī's two-armed retinue-śaktis,⁶⁴ and by almost all the numerous variants of the alphabet-goddess Mātrkā taught in the cult of Tripurasundarī.⁶⁵

3.3. The pen (lekhanī, tūlikā), which takes the place of the gesture of consciousness in the second visualization of the Rahasyapañcadaśikā, is also characteristic of Sarasvatī. Indeed the visualization of the ten-syllabled (daśākṣari) Vāgīśvarī which is given in the Prapañcasāra agrees with this form exactly.⁶⁶

Seated on a spotless lotus, her lotus-like hands holding pen and book, white as jasmine or mandāra flowers, with the moon's crescent shining on top of her mass of braided hair, may Sarasvatī destroy for you all the terrors of existence.

(61) JY 2 f. 112r 4-8: ataḥ paratarā mūrti <r> vidyāvidyeśvaritī yā / tāṃ dhyāyet sitahārendusvacchasphaṭikasamṇibhām // tuhinācalalakṣaughasadrśām padmamālinīm / kṣirābhdhikṣobhaśubhrābhrahaṃsāṇḍasadrśām sitām // tiryaksudhārasāvāhapūrapūritadik-taṭām / sarvābharāṇasamdoḥā(ā)vicitritāśarīrīnīm // sarvajñānodayaudāryasatpustaka-karāmbujām / akṣasūtra <. > gaṇanācalacitritahastikām // śukla(ra)pretamahāskandha-samsthītām viśvavigrahām / mahāmukūṭakeyūrāhārāvalivirājītām // pāśāṅkuśakaravyagrām varadābhayapānīm / padmahastām sunayanām candrārkārūṇadhārīnīm // prodgīrantīm svakād vaktrān nānābhāṣāḥ prabhedataḥ / svavaktram āviśantām tac cintyām suravarārcite //

(62) KarmK 4, 216 (187d): dūtīm saumyāṃ caturbāhūṃ sughoṣāṃ mantraghoṣīnīm / akṣamālāpustakasragvarābhayakarām yajet // There is the same verse (with smaret for yajet) at AgRah 5.883.

(63) See de Mallmann 1963: 190, 23-25.

(64) PrapañcSV 103, 20-21: śaktayaḥ / tāś ca śuklāḥ akṣavalayapustakadhārīnyāḥ / (referring to the eight Śaktis of Mātrkāśarasvatī); and ĪśānSGDPaddh MP 18.33ab: sapustaka-japasaro ... śaktayaḥ (referring to the same).

(65) See ŚVidyārṇT 83a5 - 85b27; also Lipibhairavī at BrahmāP (Lalitop) 44.19cd-23d.

(66) PrapañcS 8.29: amalakamalasaṃsthā lekhanipustakodyatkarayugalaśarojā kunda-mandāragaurī / dhṛtaśaśadharakhaṇḍollāsikoṭīracūdā bhavatu bhavabhayānām bhañjini bhārati vāḥ// The ten-syllabled Vāgīśvarī is [oṃ] vada vada vāgvādinī svāhā; see ibid. 27 and ĪśānSGDPaddh MP 18.17. In the raśmimālā japa-sequence in the south Indian Lalitā cult this same verse is used for the visualization of Vāgvādinī Sarasvatī (aiṃ klīm sauḥ vada vāgvādinī svāhā), worshipped as a subordinate of Śyāmā / Śyāmalā (/ Mātāṅgi, / Saṅgitamātrkā), the 'minister' (mantriṇī) of the 'Empress' (mahārājī) Lalitā; see Nityots 127³⁴, 134⁵⁻¹⁰, 145⁵.

The Siddhāntasāra of Īśānaśiva teaches the same form, with the addition of the neutral or supplementary gestures of protection and generosity.⁶⁷

4. PARĀ AND THE ALPHABET-DEITIES IN RITUAL

4.1. That the icon of Parā should be an ectype of Sarasvatī reflects the relation in ritual between Parā and the alphabet-deities. Thus in the Siddhayogeśvarīmata Parā and Mālinī are deployed in a manner which suggests that they are indeed two aspects of a single Word-Absolute. When the worshipper installs the three goddesses Parā, Parāparā, and Aparā on to the cusps of the maṇḍala's trident he places Parā and Mālinī on the central cusp, between Parāparā on the left cusp (as seen by the sādhaka) and Aparā on the right. First Parāparā, Mālinī and Aparā are installed; and then Parā is installed above Mālinī.⁶⁸ Abhinavagupta, referring to this order of installation in his Tantrāloka, explains that Mālinī and Mātrkā (who, he reports, may take the place of Mālinī here) are identical with Parā herself.⁶⁹ Elsewhere he identifies Parā with Mālinī as the ultimate consciousness, the thirty-seventh reality-level (tattvam) which is the unity and totality of the thirty-six from [Anāśrita-]Śiva down to Earth (pṛthivī) recognized in the common Śaiva tradition.⁷⁰

4.2. The same interpenetration or coessentiality of Parā and the alphabet-deities (< Sarasvatī) is encoded in the Anuttara system. There, according to one interpretation of the Parātriṃśikā (the

(67) ĪśānSGDPaddh MP18.30: mrṅgāṅkamaṇicandrikākumudaśaṇḍakundadyutiṃ śaśāṅkaśakalollasajjaṭilamaulikām triṅśāṇām / sitāmbaravilepanām amalāhārāhārisarajam dhṛtābhayavilekhanī(īm)varadapustakām bhāratiṃ //

(68) SiYogM 6.19-28b: *dakṣiṇe tatra śulāgre(ye) nyased devīm parāparām //19// ... śulāgre vinyased vāme tryakṣarā <m> [i.e. Aparām; see TĀ 30.26cd] paramā <m> punaḥ // 25 // ... <madhya> me [see TĀV 9 (15) 167, 2] vinyased devīm sarvākṣaramayīm [i.e. the alphabet-goddess] śubhām //26// sphuratsūryāyutaprakhyām dyotayantiṃ idam jagat / karṇikāyām nyased devīm parām ekākṣarām śubhām //27//. That 'she who consists of all the letters' (sarvākṣaramayī) is Mālinī is clear from 3. 7-19b; see also TĀ 15.333-334b and commentary.*

(69) TĀV 9 (15) 166, 10-13: na kevalam ekāmaiva madhyagā parā devī yāvan mātṛketi mālinitī cocyata ity āha "parā tu mātṛkā devī mālinī madhyagoditā".

(70) TĀ 3.233-34: bijayonisamāpattivīsargodayasundarā / mālinī hi parā śaktir nirṇitā viśvarūpiṇī // eṣā vastuta ekaiva parā kālasya karṣiṇī / śaktiśaktimadyogena yāmalatvaṃ prapadyate // ĪśvPratVivim 2, 204, 16-20, citing the Trikaśāra: seyaṃ sapatṛiṃśī tattvakalā śuddhā śaṭtriṃśyāḥ param tattvam iti sambandhaḥ / iyatā sārataṃ nirmītaṃ yad vīratya śrīviśamadarśanasāśāstre [i.e. trika(darśana)sāśāstre] nirūpitaṃ śakti-lakṣanena / (206, 18-20): anyatrāpi "yat sārām asya jagataḥ sā śaktir mālinī parā." This quotation is from the Trikaśāra; see ĪśvPratVim 1, 211.

scripture of that system), Mātrkā / Śabdarāśi (the alphabet in the standard order from a to ha + kṣa) is enclosed (samputīkṛta-) by Parā. She (sauḥ) is placed at its beginning and end, and at the beginning and end of each of its fifty letters: sauḥ sauḥ aṃ sauḥ sauḥ aṃ sauḥ sauḥ iṃ sauḥ etc. through to sauḥ kṣaṃ sauḥ sauḥ.⁷¹ In another interpretation, enabling a more condensed order of worship, Mātrkā is even more intimately fused with Parā: she is taken to be represented by the final h of sauḥ itself, the rest of the seed-syllable being placed before and after it (sau-h-aus).⁷²

4.3. An elaboration of this model, known as the Tadgraha, is found in the cult of Kubjikā. The three mantras (or more properly vidyās) of the Trika's goddesses Parāparā, Aparā and Parā (in that order) become a continuous whole (the Trividyā) slightly expanded to bring the total of its syllables up to fifty. In this way it is brought into line with the two alphabet-deities Śabdarāśi and Mālinī.⁷³ These three sets of fifty (Trividyā, Śabdarāśi, and Mālinī) are then worked into a series of fifty units each consisting of fifteen syllables. The syllables of the Trividyā (T¹⁻⁵⁰) appear one by one as the eighth (central) syllables of these fifty units of fifteen. Each is enclosed to the right and the left by the corresponding letter of the Mālinī alphabet (M¹⁻⁵⁰ [na to pha]), and the resulting units of three (Mⁿ Tⁿ

(71) PT 29-30b: caturdaśābhijaptena puṣpenāsanakalpanā / tatra srṣṭim yajed vīrah punar evāsanam tatah // srṣṭim tu samputīkṛtya paścād yajanam ārabhet /. PTViv 278, 2-3 (265, 7-8): samputīkaraṇam srṣṭer ādikṣāntāyāḥ pratyekaṃ sarvaśaś ca hrdayabijena. The 'heart-seed' (hrdayabijam) is sauḥ.

(72) PTLaghVr 21, 18 - 22, 5: yena madhyavartivisarga ubhayakotigatasvara[i.e. au]-sadurttij[i.e. s]-sparśi; PTTātD 401 - 409b: yena visargo 'yaṃ tanmadhyastho(?ā)nubhāvataḥ; RahPañc 27a: sauvarṇasamputakamadhyabhuvī praviṣṭām; Sahajānandanātha's hymn to Parā at Nityots 196, 9: sauvarṇasamputāntaḥsthām; Parākrama at YogHrD 276, 4: sauvarṇajaptakusumakṣepenāsanatām nyaset. In this last passage I emend the edition's guptāditapta- in the light of PT 29ab (evidently the authority behind this verse). The reading guptādi- is dittography: see the guptādiyoginīnām immediately before (YogHr 3.90c) and after (YogHrD 276, 5). Note also the reading sauvarṇatapta- in several of the editor's MSS.

(73) In the Trika Parāparā has thirty-nine syllables (counting the final ṣ of the two phaṭs as half a syllable each [TĀV 12 (30) 186, 7-11]): oṃ aghore hrīḥ paramaghore hūṃ ghorarūpe haḥ ghoramukhi bhīma bhīṣaṇe vama vama piba piba he ru ru ra phaṭ hūṃ haḥ phaṭ (see TĀ 30. 20-24b); Aparā has three syllables: hrīḥ hūṃ phaṭ (TĀ 30.20cd); and Parā has one: sauḥ (see TĀ 30.27ab). In the cult of Kubjikā (the Paścimāmnāya) as taught in the KubjM Parāparā has forty-two and a half syllables: aiṃ aghore hrīm hsaḥ paramaghore hūṃ ghorarūpe hsaṃ ghoramukhi bhīma bhīṣaṇe vama vama piva haḥ he ru ru ra ra hrīm hūṃ phaṭ (uddhāra at KubjM 18.4-24); Aparā has six and a half: aiṃ hrīm hrīm phrem hūṃ phaṭ (see ibid. 25-29); and Parā remains mono-syllabic: hsrīaṃ (see ibid. 30-31). When the three are taught as a continuous whole (the Trividyā) there are minor variations, though the syllables are always fifty; see NityāhnTil f. 42v2 - 44v4 (trividyānyāsaḥ) and KubjM 24.36. In the latter only 49 syllables are 'raised'; but 18.56 suggests that aiṃ, the opening syllable, should be repeated at the end.

Mⁿ) are enclosed in turn by the corresponding Śabdarāśi letters (Ś¹⁻⁵⁰ [a to kṣa]): Śⁿ Mⁿ Tⁿ Mⁿ Śⁿ. Finally each of these sets of five is enclosed on each side by a set of five syllables known as the praṇavas and serving, as it were, as the signature or hallmark of the Kubjikā cult (P¹⁻⁵ [aiṃ hrīm śrīm phrem hsaḥ]) Śⁿ Mⁿ Tⁿ Mⁿ Śⁿ P⁵⁻¹ [hsauḥ phrem śrīm hrīm aiṃ]).⁷⁴

The Trividyā of this complex is visualized as either of the two icons of Parā given above from the Kubjikāmata and the Nityāhnikatilaka.⁷⁵ It appears, therefore, that it was seen not merely as the combination of all three of the mantras (vidyās) of the Trika goddesses, but also as Parā in her transcendental aspect, that is, as Parā as the unity of the three.⁷⁶ We may say, then, that Parā is presented here as the core and the two alphabet-deities Mālinī and Śabdarāśi as the retinue.

4.4. In the Trika's Tantrasadbhāva this relation is reversed. There Parā, Parāparā and Aparā are the emanations of the alphabet-deities. In the centre of the initiation maṇḍala of that āgama the officiant (ācāryaḥ) installs Mātrkā as Bhairava with Mālinī as his consort, and surrounds them with circuits (āvaraṇāni) of female powers. Among these we find Parā, Parāparā and Aparā, in their customary circuits of twelve, eight and three Yoginis.⁷⁷

4.5. Parā's intimate relation with the alphabet is also apparent from the Ahīrbudhnyasamhitā of the southern Pañcarātra. For she is

(74) KubjM 18.32: praṇavoccārasamuktā vidyā tattvatrayātmikā / śabdamālinīmūrtisthā vidyādehaguṇojjvalā //. For the manner in which these three sets of fifty are combined see ŚaṭsāhTipp on paṭala 11, f. 42v6: tadgrahaṃ tac ca vyāvaharīṣye / yathātripaṇcāśapradhānam / yathā mālinī pañcāśavarnā / śabdarāśiḥ pañcāśavarnā / trividyā pañcāśavarnā / iti / tripañcāśapradhānam / katham tasya vinyāsaḥ / yathā / "vidyākṣaram daden madhye mālinīpadamadyagam / śabdarāśīpadam tadvat pañcapraṇavamadyataḥ / anulomavilomena nyāsaḥ samparikīrtitaḥ" // iti //.

(75) The first icon (see above n. 36 citing KubjM 6.30c-33) is prescribed for the Trividyā at ŚaṭSāhTipp 46v5 - 47r6 (iti vāgīśvarītrividyāsthūlasūksmadhyānam //). For the prescription of the second see above n. 43.

(76) For these two aspects of Parā (as one of the three and as the their sum and unity) see Sanderson 1986, 194.

(77) TanSadbh f. 17r12: bhairavam pūjayet tatra pañcāśārṇa(? śe)śarīraṇam / tadut-saṅgatām devīm nādiphāntasvarūpinīm [i.e. mālinīm] / vidyāṅgaiś ca samopetām sarvālankārabhūṣitām / dvibhujā<m> padmahastām(am) tu sitapadmāsane sthitām / vargākhyāś caṣṭabhiḥ patrair yādihāntakrameṇa tu / aghorādye(?āste)kavarnam tu patrāgre tu niveṣayet / dvātriṃśavarnavinyāsaṃ dvātriṃśe viniyojayet / parā<m> dvādaśabhedena dvādaśāre prayojayet / tryarake tu tatas cakre samyag jñātvā yathāvidhi / aparām pūjya yatneva vidhīrṣṭena karmanā / keśaraiḥ śaktayāḥ pūjyā yakārādi yathākramam /...

worshipped in the ritual of that text as a deity of the alphabet (mātrkācakram) itself, not merely in association with it.⁷⁸

4.6. This same view of Parā as goddess of the alphabet, that is, as a variant of Mātrkāśarasvatī, is found in the rituals of Tripurasundarī. Bālā, a major form of that popular goddess and the object of an independent cult,⁷⁹ is worshipped upon a yantra containing the letters of the alphabet.⁸⁰ She is evidently Parā's double, as we can see from the visualization given in the Jñānārṇavatāntra, her principal āgama.⁸¹ She is described there as white, white-robed, adorned with pearls, with the new moon upon her hair, three-eyed, and four-armed, holding the book and rosary, and showing the two common gestures. Her association with the Trika finds further expression in the detailed account of her worship (Bālāpaddhati) in the Devīrahasya. In the version of the Jñānārṇavatāntra one worships twelve Śaktis in a circle around her, installs above them the five Transcended Deities (pañcapretāsanam: Brahmā, Viṣṇu,

(78) AhirbSam 24. 14-19 give the icons of Mātrkā, Cintāmaṇi, Parā, Parāvārā and Śrī as the deities of the mātrkācakram. For the icon of Parā at 24. 16 see above, p. 5, n. 1. That Parā should appear in this rôle in a Vaṣṇava text is unexpected. But the whole text is pervaded by the influence of the Trika, and nowhere more than in its sixteenth chapter, in which its alphabet-cosmogony (mātrkāvarṇotpattiḥ) is based directly or indirectly on the third chapter of Abhinavagupta's TĀ. The identity of the AhirbSam's Parā is confirmed by 23. 107cd which gives her mantra: parā nāma mahāvīdyā somasthaurvasthasṛṣṭikā, 'the great vidyā called Parā consists of Emission [h] on Aurva [au] on Soma[s].'

(79) See, e.g., the Bālāpañcāṅga which is the fourth Parīṣiṣṭa of the Devīrahasya. Here we see her as one of the principal family goddesses (kuladevī) of the Kashmirian brahmins, the other Pañcāṅgas in these Parīṣiṣṭas being those of Jvālāmukhī, Śārikā, and Mahārājñī. Bālādevī has a pīṭha in Kashmir at Bāl'hōm (< Skt. Bālāśrama), a village about a mile to the north-east of Pāmpar (< Skt. Padmapura) in the Vihi Pargaṇa; see Stein 1900, II 459; and KaśmDTirthSam f. 24r2-3: bālāśrame bālā tripurā devī saralaurkṣāśritā, '...at the foot of a Deodar pine'.

(80) See JñānārṇT 3. 6-21 for the diagram and the distribution of the letters.

(81) JñānārṇT 3. 27c-36: muktārekhālasadratnatilakāṃ mukoṭojjvalām // 27 // viśuddha-muktāratnādhyāṃ candrarekhākīrtiṇīm / bhramadbhramaranilābhanayanatrayarājīnīm // 28 // sūryabhāsvanmahāratnakunḍalāṅkṛtām parām / śukrākārasphuranmuktāhārabhūṣa-nabhūṣitām // 29 // graiveyāṅgadamuktābhīḥ sphuratkāntivirājītām / gaṅgātaraṅgakarpuṣa-bhrambaravirājītām // 30 // nakṣatramālāsamkāśamuktāmañjīramāṇḍitām // 33 // vāmena pāninaikena pustakam cāpareṇa tu / abhayaṃ ca prayacchantīm sādhakāya varānane // 34 // akṣamālām ca varadam dakṣapānidvayena hi / dadhatīm cintayed devīm vaśya-saubhāgyavakpradam // 35 // kṣīrakundendudhavalām prasannām saṃsmaret priye // 36 // iti tripurēśvarīdhyānam nāma trītiyāḥ paśalāḥ // This visualization text is incorporated in the Bālāpañcāṅga of the Devīrahasya, pp. 492-493. Because Bālā is a form of Tripurasundarī, she is sometimes visualized in the manner of Tripurasundarī as red and red-robed (see, e.g., ibid. pp. 482-483 and p. 503) or even further hybridized by the substitution of the noose (pāśaḥ) and the goad (anikuśaḥ) proper to Tripurasundarī for the two gestures of Bālā's extra hands (see, e.g., ibid. p. 500). See also PuraścArṇ p. 806 on these three variants. The white, white-robed form, is evidently original.

Rudra, Īśvara and Sadāśiva), and then installs Bālā on this throne. In the account of the Devīrahasya the series of Śaktis is extended: after installing the twelve on the petals of the throne-lotus one installs Manonmanī in their centre, and then the three goddesses Parā, Aparā and Parāparā [above them], before making obeisance to Sadāśiva, the Great Transcended (mahāpretah), the highest of the five and the only one mentioned in this version.⁸² The order would be more rational if Sadāśiva were worshipped after Manonmanī, the three goddesses of the Trika after him, and Bālā above the three as their unity. For this is the order in the Trika proper. There Sadāśiva, the Great Transcended, is installed below the three goddesses in the centre of the central lotus just underneath the base of the central cusp. The three goddesses are worshipped above him on lotuses upon each of the cusps, and the fourth goddess (Parā in her transcendental aspect) above these.⁸³ It seems likely, then, that the text-of-ritual preserved in the Devīrahasya is the result of a compromise. Its formulators want to say that Bālā is not just Parā, but Parā in her higher role as the unitary ground of all three; but they have kept Sadāśiva at the end of the throne-series because that is his place in the original version of the throne taught in the Jñānārṇavatāntra.

That this goddess is not simply Mātrkā, but rather a reflex of Parā as the essence of Mātrkā, is evident from the fact that the text gives a separate visualization for Mātrkā proper:⁸⁴ she too is white, adorned with pearls, and white-robed, with the crescent of the moon on her hair, and she too carries the book and the rosary; but while Bālā shows the gestures of generosity and protection, Mātrkā has a water-jar (kamaṇḍaluḥ) in place of the latter.

4.7. Finally, there is the evidence of the similarity between the

(82) Devīrah 492¹¹⁻¹⁵: patreṣu vāmāyai - [i.e. namaḥ] / jyeṣṭhāyai - / raudryai - / ambikāyai - / icchāyai - / jñānāyai - / kriyāyai / kubjikāyai - / citrāyai - / viśaghnikāyai - / dūtāryai - / ānandāyai - // madhye manonmanīyai // aiṃ parāyai - / aparāyai - / parāparāyai - // hsaṃ sadāśivamahāpretapadmāsanāya namaḥ / paramēśivaparyāṅkāya namaḥ // iti pīṭham nyasya tatraiva hṛdaye śrībālām dhyāyet // There is the same incorporation of the three goddesses before Sadāśiva in the cult of Tripurabhairavi; see PrapañcS 9.13-14; PrapañcSV 130⁴⁵.

(83) See Sanderson 1986, 178-194.

(84) JñānārṇT 2. 65c-67b: pañcāśadvārṇarūpām ca kaparda (Ed. kandarpa) - śaśibhūṣaṇām // śuddhasphaṭikasaṃkāśām śuddhakṣaṇavirājītām / muktāvajrasphuradbhūṣām japamālām kamaṇḍalum // pustakam varadānam ca bibhratiṃ paramēśvarīm / evaṃ dhyātvā...

seed-syllables of Mātrkā and Parā. That of the former is hsauḥ,⁸⁵ hsaum,⁸⁶ or hṣaum.⁸⁷ That of the latter is sauḥ.⁸⁸

5. THE ICON OF PARĀ AND THE TRIKA'S SELF-PERCEPTION

5. The Trika sees itself as the highest level within the Śaiva revelation: below it are the Bhairava cults of the Southern Stream; below these is the common or exoteric Śaiva system known as the Siddhānta; below the Siddhānta are the various Pāśupata systems (Lākula, Vaimala, Mausula and Kārūka); below Śaivism is the Vaiṣṇava Tantric system of the Pañcarātra; and finally there is the universal prescription (sāmānyo dharmah) of the smārta and śrauta traditions. Thus the Trika locates itself at the furthest remove from neutral, 'vedic' orthodoxy. It might be somewhat surprising therefore that its highest deity should be an ectype of Sarasvatī, the exoteric, nonsectarian consort of Brahmā. The goddesses of the Krama, the Trika's rival for the position of ultimate esoteric revelation, could not be more different in this respect. Their transcendence of the common Hindu religion is vividly revealed in fearsome images of Kāpālīka non-duality. How the appearance of Parā was read within the Kashmirian Trika is uncertain, since there is no explicit analysis of her icon in its surviving literature. However, the theory of scriptural revelation expounded in the works of Abhinavagupta suggests that the nonsectarian neutrality of her image would have been understood to express the doctrine that the Trika encapsulates the universal essence of the divine Word (vāk). Parā would then be seen as the embodiment of revelation (āgamah) in its entirety, both the Tantric and the Vedic.⁸⁹ Thus while the icons of the Krama do

(85) See, e.g., the mantra of Mātrkāśarasvatī at AgnikPaddh ff. 70v15 - 71r1: hsauḥ am am im um umśam śam sam ham lam hsaḥ sarasvatyai namaḥ; and JñānārṇT 3. 16cd, which places this syllable in the centre of the central triangle of the alphabet-yantra of Bālā.

(86) See, e.g., KarmK 4, 222¹⁶; ŚVidyārṇT 83b32 (re Śrīkaṇṭhādīmātrkā).

(87) See ĪśānSGDPaddh KP 6, p. 61¹².

(88) See, e.g., TĀ 30. 27ab. The Trisirobhairavatantra adds variants, of which one, hsauḥ, is identical with one of the forms of the Mātrkā seed-syllable; see ibid. 28cd and commentary. Note also the mantra of Parāśakti given in the Kaula system of Devīrah: om śrīm hrīm klīm sauḥ hsaḥ parāśaktiyai aiṃ svāhā (2. 68c - 69b).

(89) She may be compared here with Parāṣkaladevī, the goddess of om, the pan-Hindu seed-syllable. She is white and two-armed like Parā, but has only one hand-attribute: the consciousness-gesture. See ŚVidyārṇT 121a33 - b3: atha vakṣye maheśāni parāṣkaladevatām / yasyāḥ smaraṇamātreṇa cidānandāyate tanuḥ // anugrahādīr[=o] deveśi bindunādakalātmakah [+ m] / parāṣkaladevīyaṃ parabrahmasvarūpiṇī // śuklāmbaparidhānā śuklamālyā-nulepanā / jñānamudrāṅkitā yogipativr̥ndena sevita // nothing to contradict the orthodox perception of the outer reaches of the Tantric tradition, that of the Trika's Parā responds to this perception by boldly appropriating the orthodox symbolism of the revealed Word, extending it to cover both the Tantric and the Vedic, and assigning the latter, the scriptural tradition which is the origin of this symbolism, to the Word's lowest, most exoteric level.

6. PARĀPARĀ AND APARĀ

6.1. The icons of Parāparā and Aparā, however, have no such symbolic power. In keeping with the norms of the early śākta Śaiva tradition of which the Trika is part they have an essentially Kāpālīka character. Evidence for these icons, unfortunately, is less complete than for that of Parā. Our fullest visualizations are found in the Siddhayogeśvarimata. There Parāparā is described as follows:⁹⁰

[Red] as blazing fire, wearing a garland of skulls, with three glowing eyes⁹¹, she sits with trident and skull-staff in her hands on [the shoulders of Sadāśiva,] the 'Great Transcended'.⁹² Her tongue flickers in and out like lightning. She is gross-bodied and adorned with great serpents. Her mouth yawns wide and at its corners are terrible fangs. Ferocious, with her brows knitted in rage, wearing a sacred thread in the form of a huge snake, adorned with a string of human corpses round her neck, with the [severed] hands of a human corpse for lotuses to deck her ears, her voice like the thunder of the clouds at the world's end, she seems to swallow space itself.

Aparā is said to have exactly the same appearance, except that she is red-black (kṛṣṇapiṅgalā) in colour rather than red.⁹³

6.2. The Tantrasadbhāva too has visualization texts for these more sinister, subordinate goddesses. That for Parāparā is related textually to the dhyāna just quoted from the Siddhayogeśvarimata. It contains a number of the same quarter and half verses. However,

(90) SiYogM 6.20 - 24b: [daḥṣiṇe tatra śūlāgre nyased devīm parāparām (see above n. 68) // aṣṭatrimśatśams(ās) tathā varṇam(m) jvalatpāvakaśam nibhām // 20 // kapālamālābharaṇām netratritayabhāsurām / saśūlakhaḥjvāṅgadharām mahāpretakṛtāsanām // 21 // vidyujjihvā <m> > mahākāyām mahāsarpa vibhūṣitām / vikarālām mahādamaṣṭrām mahogrām bhṛkūṭekṣanām // 22 // mahāpannaga(na)śamvitām(?pidām) śavamālāvibhūṣitām / mahāśavakarām-bhoja(gaṃ)cārukarnāvatamaṣakām // 23 // pralayāmbudanirghoṣām <?saṃ> -grasantim ivāmbaram /

(91) Literally 'shining with three eyes.'

(92) See Sanderson 1986, 179-180 concerning TĀ 15.309-312.

(93) SiYogM 6. 25-26b: śūlāgre vinyased vāme tryakṣarā <m> > [i.e. aparām] paramā- <m> > punah / ... // 25 // parāparoktarūpeṇa(na) vidyai(e)śa kṛṣṇapiṅgalā(āt) /

it mentions neither the goddess's colour nor the attributes of her hands. There are also crucial differences and additional details. She is to be visualized in the Ardhanārīśvara form, that is, as the left half of a composite body whose right half is her consort Bhairava. She is eight-armed, laughs wildly, intoxicated with wine; and scorpions are added to the snakes which adorn her.⁹⁴ She shares this last feature with Aghora in his eighteen-armed form as Svachchanda-bhairava.⁹⁵

The same text describes Aparā as seated in the lap of the alphabet deity Śabdarāśibhairava in the centre of a red three-spoked wheel. She laughs intoxicated, her eyes rolling with drunkenness.⁹⁶

6.3. The Piṅgalāmata, which, as I have indicated above, gives instructions for the painting of all three goddesses as a group, says only that while Parā should be white, Parāparā should be black and Aparā yellow; and that both, like Parā, should be three-faced, carry the trident, and be enthroned on lotuses.⁹⁷ Their three-facedness may derive from the Trika's Triśirobhairavatantra,⁹⁸ but the unusual colours attributed to the subsidiary pair do not. For that the Triśirobhairava agrees with the Siddhayogeśvarimata in making Parāparā red and Aparā red-black can be inferred from a section of that Tantra summarized by Abhinavagupta in his Tantrāloka, when he teaches its version of the maṇḍala of the trident-and-lotuses (triśūlābjamaṇḍalam). We are not told the colours of the goddesses enthroned upon it; but we do learn that the three lotuses upon the trident's cusps, which serve as the seats of the goddesses, are (i) red and eight-petaled, (ii) red-black and three-petaled, and (iii) white and

(94) TanSadbh f. 44v3 - (4. 15 - 20b): ataḥ paraṃ pravakṣyāmi vidyā <m> caiva parāparāṃ / ekaviravi(?) pradhānena bhairavārdhaśarīragāṃ // 15 // karmikā(a)sthāṃ smared devīm catvāriṃśakṣarā <m> śubhāṃ / patrāṣṭake tu aghoryādyāḥ padabhede yajet priye // 16 // prahasanti <m> madonmattā <m> daṃṣṭrotkaṭabhayānakā <m> / vikarālām mahābhīmām śavamālāvibhūṣitām // 17 // gonāsair vṛścikais caiva sarpaṃ ābharaṇais tathā / mahāśavakārambhajacārukaṇāvatāṃsakām // 18 // pralayāmbudanirghoṣām aṣṭaḥastām subhīṣāṇām / tryakṣām ca mahādaṃṣṭrām udgīrantīm ivāṇalam // 19 // icchārūpadharām devīm prajāṭīrṭvināśinī <m> /

(95) SvT 2. 90ab: vṛścikair agnivarnābhair hāreṇa tu virājitaṃ /

(96) TanSadbh 4. 1c - 5b: aparāyā varārohe sādhanā <m> yad vyavasthitaṃ // 1 // tryarake tu tataḥ cakre nābhinemisamanvite / javākusumasamkṣāse dādimikusumārceṣi // 2 // tatrasṭhaṃ pūjayed devaṃ sarvavarādharam [i.e. śabdarāśibhairavam] haram / tad-dusa(ccha)ṅgatām devīm tri(tr)varṇām aparā <m> śubhām // 3 // prahasanti(n) madonmattā(m) madavibhrāntalocanā <m> / tadṛṣṭasahasrasamkṣāṣām sarvāṇāṅkarabhūṣitām // 4 // itthamrūpeṇa sā devī pūjanīyā samāhinā /

(97) PiṅM 5.18: parā..... sarve śuklāḥ; 5.21-23c: aparā..... sarve pītāḥ; 5.25c-26a: parāparā kṛṣṇāḥ smṛtā hy etaḥ / This passage lists the Tantric deities according to the colours in which they must be painted. See also PiṅM 5.37c - 38b quoted above, n. 48.

(98) See above, p. 00.

twelve-petaled. These are evidently the thrones of Parāparā, Aparā and Parā respectively, since the number of petals prescribed for each lotus is that of the these goddesses' attendant Yoginīs.⁹⁹ Since the colours of the lotus-thrones of the three goddesses are exactly those assigned to the goddesses themselves by the Siddhayogeśvarimata, it is virtually certain that the Triśirobhairava's goddesses were of the same colours.

6.4. South Indian Tantric sources, though generous with information concerning Parā, are almost entirely silent on the icons of these two secondary goddesses. Research in this area is far from complete: there are various works preserved in southern manuscript collections which will doubtless add to our knowledge of this and related systems of esoteric Śaiva worship. So far, however, I am aware of only one description of Parāparā and Aparā in the literature of the Tamil-speaking region; and this deviates from the āgamic icons to such an extent and in such a manner that we are bound to conclude that the original, strongly Kāpālika icons of these two goddesses, were suppressed or little known, and that the present description exploits this lacuna for the text's own and quite local sectarian purpose. The passage occurs in the Lalitopākhyāna of the south Indian Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa. Its concern is the glorification of Kāmākṣī, the goddess Lalitā (Tripurasundarī) in the south Indian city of Kāñci (Kāñcīpuram), and the focal point of the south Indian cult of that important goddess:¹⁰⁰

(99) TĀ 31.115: kajatrāyaṃ tu śulāgre(am) vedāṃśair dvādaśāṅgulam / kramād dakṣānyamadhyeṣu tryaṣṭadvādaśapatrakam // 'three lotuses on the cusps of the trident [with a radius] of twelve finger-breadths across their four segments, on the right, the left, and in the centre, with three, eight, and twelve petals respectively'. 118cd: raktam raktāṣitam śuklam kramād ūrdhvāmbujatrayam // 'the three upper lotuses are red, red-black, and white respectively'. The eight Yoginīs forming the retinue of Parāparā are Aghorā, Paramaghorā, Ghorarūpā, Ghoramukhī, Bhīmā, Bhīṣaṇā, Vamanī and Pibānī (the deities of the eight parts [padāni] of her mantra [see above n. 73]); see TĀV 12 (33) 341¹⁰¹ quoting Triśirobhairava. The three Yoginīs of Aparā (embodied as the three syllables of her vidyā) are Mānāsī, Cakravigā and Mohanī; see SiYogM f. 34v; TanSadbh f. 43r-v. The twelve of Parā (embodied as twelve transformations of sauḥ arising through the substitution for -auḥ of the twelve vowels (a, ā, i, ī, u, ū, e, ai, o, au, am, ah) are Siddhī, Rddhī, Laksmī, Dipti, Mālā, Śivāśivā, Sumukhī, Vamanī, Nandā, Harikeśī, Hayānānā and Viśveśī; see MālvijUT 20.46-47.

(100) BrahmāP (Lalitop) 39.9-14b: ādyā yānuttarā(yānutarā) sā syāc citparā tu ādikāraṇam / anākhyeti(antākhyeti) tathā proktā svarūpa(svarūpāt)tattvacintakaiḥ // 9 // dvitīyābhūt tataḥ śuddhāparā dvibhujasamyutā / dakṣahaste yogamudrām vāmahaste tu pustakam // 10 // bibhrati himakundendumuktāsamavapurdutīḥ / parāparā trītyā syād bālārkyūtasammitā // 11 // sarvābharaṇasamyuktā dakṣa(śa)hastadhṛtāmbujā / vāmorunastahastā ca(vā) kirītārdhendubhūṣaṇā // 12 // paścāc caturbhujā jātā sāparā [=sā aparā] tripurārūṇā / pāśāṅkuṣeṣukodaṇḍapañcabāṇalasatkarā // 13 // lalitā saiva kāmākṣī kāñcyam vyaktim upagatā /

The primordial [Goddess] than whom nothing is greater is Parā-as Consciousness, the First Cause. Those who contemplate the nature of the Self also call her the Nameless (Anākhyā). She is the source of Parā proper, the second [Power]. This Parā is two-armed. She shows the yoga-gesture with her right hand and holds a manuscript in the other. Her body shines [white] as snow, jasmine, the moon, and pearls. Third is Parāparā. Red with the radiance of a myriad of rising suns she is decked out with every variety of adornment. She holds a lotus in her right hand and rests her left hand upon her thigh. She wears a crown and the new moon upon it. After her came Aparā. This is the red, four-armed Tripurā. She carries a noose, a goad, a sugar-cane bow and [a set of] five arrows. It is this same goddess Lalitā that has manifested herself in Kāñcī as Kāmākṣī.

These verses tell us more about the relationship between the Trika and the cult of Kāmākṣī/Lalitā than about the Trika itself. They seek to universalize the cult by fitting it into the Trika's triadic-tetradic schema of the three goddesses and their transcendental unity. What is remarkable is the position assigned to Lalitā herself. In spite of the fact that she is the true focus of the cult, and although it is her glorification that is the principal purpose of this text, no more is claimed for her than that she take the place of Aparā, the lowest of the three goddesses. At the same time, however, she is made to harness the full power and prestige of the Trika. For we can see from the eighth khaṇḍa of the Parāśurāmakalpasūtra that the worship of Parā, following the Anuttara system based on the exegesis of the Parātrīṃśikā, was incorporated within the cycle of her worship: Parā became the 'heart' of Lalitā. So the relationship was not necessarily conceived as one of subordination: Kāmākṣī / Lalitā could be seen as incorporating the whole of the Trika pantheon in such a way that the four-armed manifestation on the surface of the cult was only one level of her identity, Parā, her heart, being seen as a higher form of Kāmākṣī herself. Also local is the red, two-armed goddess holding a lotus in her right hand, who is placed between the two as the Parāparā of this scheme. She is evidently the goddess Ādilakṣmī, who is said in the Lalitopākhyāna to dwell in the cave (bilākāśaḥ, guhākāśaḥ) which is the heart of the Kāmākṣī temple (40.103-107). What we have, then, is not simply a case of the Trika colonizing and subordinating a local cult, but a case of a local cult incorporating the Trika and superimposing the identity of its goddesses upon the Trika's āgamic pantheon. We see the same process at Cidambaram, probably the most important of all south Indian Śaiva centres. The famous Śiva Lord of Dancers (Natarāja) enshrined there is made the symbol of the Trika's dynamic Absolute in the Parātrīṃśikātātparyadīpikā,¹⁰¹ the

(101) See above, p. 00.

Mahārthamañjarīparimala of Maheśvarānanda (here in the context of the Krama),¹⁰² and the Ānandatāṇḍavavilāsastotra of the latter's guru Mahāprakāśa.¹⁰³ The same projection has occurred in the variant of the Kubjikā cult known as the [Ṣaḍanvaya] Śāmbhava.¹⁰⁴

7. SCRIPTURAL AND POSTSCRIPTURAL INTERPRETATION OF THE THREE ICONS

7.1. The Mālinīvijayottaratantra, the scripture expounded in Abhinavagupta's Tantrāloka, describes Parāparā and Aparā only in the barest outline. Following the Siddhayogeśvarimata and echoing some of its wording it makes them red and red-black respectively. However, it also distinguishes them with regard to the sentiments which they embody. Aparā, it says, is terrifying (bhīṣaṇā), the opposite of the gentle, nourishing Parā, while Parāparā is half-way between these extremes, being "not terrifying, yet somewhat ferocious (kiṃcidugrā na bhīṣaṇā)."¹⁰⁵ This accords with the doctrine that the three goddesses are the sources and archetypes of the three great divisions of the Mothers (mātarāḥ), namely the Mild (aghorāḥ, śāntāḥ), the Terrible (ghorāḥ), and the Utterly Terrible (ghoratarāḥ, ghoraghoratarāḥ).¹⁰⁶ These three divisions, which, in the exorcistic context of the Trika's cult of Yoginīs, are subdivided into various classes of female spirits,¹⁰⁷ are presented by the Mālinīvijayottara in

(102) See MahārthMP p. 194²⁵⁻²⁶. The same is perhaps implied at 188²²⁻²³ in which Bhairava (189¹⁶: Svachandabhairava) is said to be in a jewelled pavilion in the saṃvidākāśaḥ. The latter and cidambaram (Cidambaram) are synonyms.

(103) Quoted at MahārthMP 159²⁶ - 160².

(104) See the verse for Parāśambhunātha in the raśmīmālā, a sequence of mantras used in the dawn japa of the Lalitā cult: pūṃhantāsvarūpāya tasmai paramaśāmbhave / ānandatāṇḍavoddandaṇḍitāya namo namaḥ // (Nityots 132¹³⁻¹⁴). The mantra: aiṃ hrīm śrīm hskhphrem hsauiḥ aham aham hsauiḥ hskhphrem śrīm hrīm aiṃ (Nityots 126⁸⁻⁹). In this system Śiva as Navātman / Navakeśvara is visualized dancing as he embraces his consort Samayā Kubjikā; see, e.g., ŚāmbhNirṇ 3.10: (mūrtiḥ) navinavāridākārā nṛtyanti yauvanānvitā /; NityāhTil folio 26r: nilaḥ pañcānāno nṛtyann ūrdhwaparyāṅkaśaṃsthitaḥ / divraṣṭavarasadeśīyo ... navaḥ // This icon is illustrated in Rawson (1978: 19); see above, n. 38.

(105) MāVijUT 8. 72b-74b: daḥṣiṇottarāyora duayam / parāparām svarūpeṇa rakta-varṇām mahābālām // 72 // icchārūpadharām dhyātvā kiṃcidugrām na bhīṣaṇām / aparām vāmaśṛṅge tu bhīṣaṇām kṛṣṇaṇīgalām // 73 // icchārūpadharām devīm pranātārtvināśinām /.

(106) MāVijUT 3. 30-33; TĀ 3. 71c-75c (concerning Parā and Parāparā); JayadYāmT saṭka 1, paṭala 26 (śūleśvarīvidhiḥ), 36-38b: cakrānām trisvarūpānām śāntaghorātighorinām / yonayāḥ kīrtitā hy e < tāḥ > ... // 36 // ābhīḥ saṃpūjītābhis tu siddhābhis trisvarūpā(i)kam / viśvaṃ yad(saṃ) yoginījālaṃ śāntaghoravimīśrakam // 37 // vaśam āyāty asaṃdehāt setsyante sarvasiddhayaḥ / . Hence at JayadYāmT saṭka 4, folio 190r2 (bhairavānānāvidhau bhūmikāvidhipaṭalaḥ, verse 61ab) the three goddesses are termed Aghorā, Ghorā and Ghoraghoratarā: aghorā ghorarūpā ca ghorā(ā)ghoratarātmikā / . The same equation is seen at RahPañc 12.

(107) See the Yoginī-taxonomy of Yoginījālaśaṃvaratantra (one of the Śaktiāntras of the Vidyāpīṭha division of the Bhairava canon) which is given in the Yoginisaṃcāraḥ-prakaranaṃ of the Jayadrathayāmālatāntra (3, folio 172r5 - v4 [yoginīcakreśvarotpattipaṭala verses more abstract terms. The three classes of Śiva's Powers (śivaśak-tayaḥ), as it calls them, are defined as (i) those which liberate souls (aghorāḥ / parāḥ), (ii) those which hold souls where they are, preventing them from progressing towards liberation by causing them to cling to the fruits of their actions (ghorāḥ / parāparāḥ), and (iii) those which immerse souls in sensuality, drawing them downwards to ever lower levels of existence (ghoratarāḥ / aparāḥ).¹⁰⁸

7.2. In the Jayadrathayāmala and in the exegesis of Abhinavagupta this abstraction is developed further. In the former Parā, Parāparā and Aparā are equated with Śiva's great powers of icchā, jñānam and kriyā, that is, with (i) the prediscursive impulse which precedes all cognition and action, (ii) cognition, and (iii) action, and also with Śiva, his Power (Śakti) and individualized consciousness (naraḥ, aṇuḥ),¹⁰⁹ the triad whose non-duality is the central doctrine of the Kashmirian Trika.¹¹⁰ The latter records yet other metaphysical triads as the real nature of the goddesses: (i) emission (srṣṭiḥ), maintenance of the emitted (sthitiḥ), and its resorption (saṃhārah); (ii) the agent of cognition (pramātā), the medium of cognition (pramāṇam), and the object of cognition (prameyam); (iii) non-duality (abhedāḥ / advaitam), duality-cum-non-duality (bhedābhedāḥ / dvaitādvaitam), and duality (bhedāḥ / dvaitam).¹¹¹

7.3. Of these equations the most resonant in the system is certainly that in which Parā is identified with the cosmic process of emission or creation. For this links the concrete qualities of the goddess as the nectar effusing invigorator of life and knowledge with the abstract categories of non-duality and cognitive agency (subjectivity [pramāṭr̥tā]). The quality of invigoration (āpyāyanam) contemplated in her *sādhana*s is easily translated into the concept of emission when this is understood as the inexhaustible creative power of an 71c-82)). See also paṭala 15 of the Trika's Tantrasadbhāva, parts of which are cited in an exorcistic context by Kṣemarāja commenting on the Netraṭantra; see NeTU 2 (19) 145^{3,20} and 146^{15,7} [Emendations: for dūṣikā, nakradūṣī, dūṣate, and dūṣikā read cūṣikā, nakrucūṣī etc.; for āśāḍya read ācchāḍya, for patralekhī read patralehī].

(108) MālvijUT 3. 30-33;

(109) JayadYamT 4, folio 190r1-3 (bhairavānānāvidhau bhūmikāvidhipaṭalāḥ verses 59b-62b): parā caivāparā caiva sattā(ntā) caiva parāparā // 59 // triskandhā sā tridhāmasthā icchājñānakriyātmikā / vāmā jyeṣṭhā tathā raudrā trīṣṛṣā trīśirothitā // 60 // aghorā ghorarūpā ca ghorā(ā)ghoratarātmikā / śāntā ghorā tathā raudrā bhavā caivābhavā tathā // 61 // tathā hy atibhavā devī naraśaktiśivātmikā /

(110) See, e.g., TĀV 7 (10) 124^{7,8}; PTViv 187 verse 3 (25⁸); PTFātD 12c-16c.

(111) See TĀ 1.2; 5.23c-25b; 33.30 (reading parā parāparā rather than the edition's parāparā parā); TSāra 28^{7,13}; RahPañc 13. For the equation with icchā etc. see, e.g., Bodhpāñc 15.

autonomous (svatantrā), unseconded (advitīyā) consciousness (saṃvit, cit) which must project all reality within itself; and the categories of non-duality and the subject or agent of cognition (pramātā) are generally presented from the same point of view: as the basis or source of appearance in consciousness rather than as that which remains when this appearance has been dissolved. The Supreme Power (parā śaktiḥ) is certainly both projector and resorber of phenomena in Abinavagupta's non-dualism; but his exposition of the Trika as a system of encoded ritual and meditation is definitely and explicitly weighted towards an emanationist rather than a resorptionist representation of this dynamic non-duality. He reveals this inflection in the following cryptic analysis of the meaning of Parā's seed-syllable sauḥ:¹¹²

This real [world] (sat [= s]), which begins from [the Sphere (aṇḍam) of] Brahmā and is referred to [in the *Mālinivijayottara*¹¹³] as the Sphere of Matter (māyāṇḍam) derives its reality from the fact that it traverses [the 'trident' (= -au-) of the three powers of] precognitive impulse (icchā), cognition and action. For it is only by traversing these three powers that it is projected into (visṛjyate [= -h (visarga)] [i.e. comes to rest in] the consciousness of Bhairava. Or rather it is only by this means that it is projected out from that [innermost consciousness]. Thus the fact that these [Spheres, of Brahmā, prakṛtiḥ and māyā] are real [s-] entails that they are identical with those three powers [-au-], that they are the projection [-h] [of the ultimate consciousness] and are of the essence of that consciousness.

The commentator Jayaratha points out that in this passage Abhinavagupta is reading sauḥ from both perspectives: both from that of resorption (saṃhārahkramāḥ) and from that of emission (srṣṭikramāḥ). Abhinavagupta gives two meanings to the projection expressed by the -h element of the seed-syllable, so that sauḥ is made to express both (i) [the awareness of] the projection of the universe into consciousness, the fact that it comes to rest (viśrāntiḥ), through resorption, within the non-duality of the transcendental subject

(112) TĀ 4. 186b-89b: tathā hi sad idaṃ brahmamūlaṃ māyāṇḍasamjñitam // 186 // icchājñānakriyārohaṃ vinā naiva sad ucyate / tacchaktitritayārohaḥ bhairaviye cidāmani // 187 // visṛjyate hi tat tasmād bahir vātha visṛjyate / evaṃ sadrūpataivaśāṃ satāṃ śakti-trayātmataṃ // 188 // visargaṃ parabodhena samākṣipyauva vartate /

(113) MālvijUT 2. 49: pārthivam prakṛtaṃ caiva māyiyam śaktam eva ca / iti saṃkṣ-epataḥ proktaṃ etad aṇḍacatuṣṭayam // The 'sphere of earth' (pārthivam aṇḍam) is the sphere (or 'egg') of Brahmā (brahmāṇḍam) which occupies the lowest tattva (prthivīṭattvam). The prakṛtaṃ aṇḍam is that and everything up to and including prakṛtiḥ, the twenty-fourth tattva (the ultimate non-spiritual substance or primal matter of the Sāṃkhyas). The māyiyam aṇḍam (Māyāṇḍam), i.e. the Sphere of Māyā, is these and everything else up to an including māyā, the thirty-first tattva and the material cause of all samsāric manifestation. All this and the pure tattvas up the thirty-fifth (śaktitattvam) are the śaktam aṇḍam. Beyond these is Śiva, the thirty-sixth and final tattva. See also ParamSāra 4 and commentary.

(parapramātā, akalpitapramātā), and (ii) [the awareness of] its projection out of that non-duality, its emission into consciousness from within.¹¹⁴ Nonetheless, Jayaratha explains, Abhinavagupta intends the mode of emission to be understood as the basic sense of the syllable. For the Tantrāloka speaks of sauḥ as the 'heart in emission' (sr̥ṣṭau hr̥t [= sr̥ṣṭihṛdayam]), contrasting it with khphrem̐, the 'heart in resorption' (saṃhārahṛdayam).¹¹⁵ It analyses both syllables in such a way that each expresses reality both in the mode of emission and in the mode of resorption; but in sauḥ it is the former which is essential and predominant, and in khphrem̐ it is the latter.¹¹⁶ Thus Abhinavagupta's interpretation of sauḥ is in keeping with the aesthetics of creation, creativity and invigoration encoded in Parā's āgamic icons and *sādhana*s; and it is so in spite of a general tendency in his exegesis to assimilate the understanding of the Trika into the doctrines of the Krama with their emphatically resorptionist orientation.

8. KĀLASAMKARŚINĪ, THE FOURTH GODDESS

8.1.1. I have shown elsewhere certain aspects of this influence of the Krama on the Trika in Kashmir, notably Abhinavagupta's inter-

(114) TĀV 3 (4) 217¹⁴-218⁵: parapramātrātmāni bhaivariye rūpe visrjyate tatra viśrāntim yāyād iti saṃhārahkramah / aṭha vā sr̥ṣṭikrameṇa tasmād bhairaviyād rūpāt tad viśvaṃ bahir visrjyate śaktisopānāvārohakrameṇa kalādikṣitiparyantaṇa sthūlena rūpānāvabhāsata ity arthah /

(115) TĀ 4. 191cd: idaṃ saṃhārahṛdayaṃ prācyaṃ sr̥ṣṭau ca hr̥m matam // The resorption-seed here is definitely khphrem̐. Padoux (1963: 356-358) gives it as rkḥksem̐ (for rkḥkhem̐?), which goes against TĀ 5. 146 and commentary, where it is khphrem̐. However, he does follow Jayaratha, who refers to the letter which is either kṣa or kha as kūṭavarnah (TĀV 3 [4] 222⁴: saṃhārahkūṇḍalinyātmakasyaitadrūpalipeḥ kūṭavarnasya ... 'the kūṭa letter, which embodies the Kuṇḍalinī of Resorption, and shows this in the shape of its written form.'). The term kūṭa-occurs with reference to the alphabet only in the expression kūṭabijam applied to kṣa; see TĀV 2 (3) 178^{4,11}. Gnoli (1972: 176) takes Abhinavagupta to be referring to khphrem̐ here and he is certainly right to have done so. However, he does not come to terms with the fact that Jayaratha seems to disagree. I propose that the reading kūṭavarnasya in his commentary is a corruption of kūṇḍalavarnasya. JayadYāT 3aṭka 4, folio 200v 2-3 gives kūṇḍalam among code-terms for kṣa (kūṇḍalam bhairavaṃ rāvaṃ rūvini yoginipriyam / kūṇḍalinātham atulaṃ krūraṃ vai bhīmaṃ aṅkuṣam / phakāraṃ dhāmadhāmāṇam nāmaḥbhiḥ samudāhṛtam //) and Jayaratha quotes this same passage on the code-names of ha at TĀV 2 (3) 145⁵.

(116) TĀ 4. 191cd: idaṃ saṃhārahṛdayaṃ [i.e. khphrem̐] prācyaṃ [i.e. sauḥ] sr̥ṣṭau ca hr̥m matam // TĀV 3 (4) 219^{15,16}: śrīparābijasya saṃhārahkramenodaye 'pi sr̥ṣṭiprādhānyena darśitam / ibid. 223^{7,10}: asya ca śrīparābijavat sr̥ṣṭikrameṇa saṃbhavaty apy udaye rephādīnām varṇānām bhedasaṃhārahakatvāt tatprādhānyena nirdeśaḥ saṃhārahṛdayam iti / See also NityāsoḍARĀ 248¹⁸: śaktibijasyavarūpā parā śaktir divyāmṛtakalayā samastam jagad utpādayanti dhātavyā / and Kulacūḍāmanītantra quoted at ŚivSūVim 58¹⁶: ekaṃ sr̥ṣṭimayaṃ bijam. That this last passage refers to sauḥ is clear from the context of its citation at PTViv 269⁶ (242⁶).

pretation of the triadic, emission-centred system of the Siddhaya-geśvarimata and the Mālinīvijayottara in the light of the tetradic Trika of the *Devayāmala*¹¹⁷ in which one worships Kālasamkarṣiṇī as a fourth, resorptive goddess above Parā, Parāparā and Aparā.¹¹⁸ We do not have the Devayāmala's visualization of this goddess; but we do have her mantras and these lead us to parallel sources from which we can form an idea of the missing icon.

8.1.2. The mantras are two, one nine-syllabled (navākṣari vidyā) and the other seventeen-syllabled (saptadaśākṣari): (i) *khphrem̐ mahācaṇḍayogeśvar*¹¹⁹ and (ii) hr̥m mahācaṇḍayogeśvari ṭhṛ dhṛ ṭhṛ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ.¹²⁰ They show that this form of the Trika is an extension of the tradition of Kālī worship propagated in the āgamas of the Krama and in the *Jayadrathayāmala*tantra. The first mantra, that of nine syllables, is central to the former;¹²¹ and the second, that of seventeen syllables, is almost identical with the latter's principal mantra of Kālasamkarṣiṇī (*hr̥m mahācaṇḍayogeśvari ṭhṛm dhṛm thr̥m phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ*¹²²).

8.1.3. There is nothing in the āgamas of the Krama comparable to the yāga of the Devayāmala: the pantheons of those texts are entirely independent of the Trika. The Jayadrathayāmala, on the other hand, contains among its many yāgas of Kālī / Kālasamkarṣiṇī four which are of the same kind as the Devayāmala's, the goddess

(117) See Sanderson 1986, 188-204.

(118) See TĀV 2 (3) 82^{16,18} and 12 (31) 271⁴ quoting the Devayāmala: tanmadhye tu parā devī dakṣiṇe tu parāparā / aparā vāmaśṛṅge tu madhyaśṛṅgordhvataḥ śṛṇu // yā sā saṃkarṣiṇī devī parātītā vyavasthitā / TĀV 12 (31) 270^{16,17}: parāyā api parā māṭrsadbhāvādīśabdavyapadeśyā kālasamkarṣiṇī bhagavaty uktā...

(119) The vidyā is raised at TĀ 30. 45c-46b (khphrem̐) + 30. 54-55b (mahācaṇḍayogeśvar).

(120) This vidyā is given in the Mālinī code (explained at, e.g., MāVijUT 3. 37-41b) in a passage of the Devayāmala quoted at TĀV 11 (29) 49¹⁻¹³. For nāsāraṇam in line 3 read nāsāraṇam.

(121) It is raised at Devīvyś 85-87 (folio 8v 1-4 [navavarṇā kuleśvari]). KālikulaKA folios 15v7-16r2 paraphrase this and prescribe the vidyā for the worship of each of the five Krama cycles, Emission (sr̥ṣṭi-), Presence (sthiti-, avatāra-), Resorption (saṃhāra-), the Nameless (anākhyā-), and the [Pure] Light (bhāsa-) (pañcacakrasāmānyā navākṣari vidyā). In both texts a seventeen syllabled form is produced by separating its letters: kha pha ra em ca na ḍa ya o ga e śa va ri; see Devīvyś 89ab (folio 9v 4-5): navavarṇaviḥhedena jñeyā sā śoḍaśādhikā; and KālikulaKA folio 15v5. At DevīpañcŚ 3. 35-40 and 4. 63-68 the nine syllabled vidyā is raised as the formula of the cycles of emission (sr̥ṣṭikramah) and resorption (saṃhārahkramah). It is also given in the Kālimata tradition of the cult of Tripurasundarī as the mantra of the Uttarāmāyā; see JñānārṇT 9. 7-8b. Compare also the seventeen syllabled vidyā raised at DevīpañcŚ 5. 57-63 for the worship of the cycle of the Nameless (anākhyakramah): ām khphrem̐ phām phīm mahācaṇḍayogeśvar phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ in each being worshipped above and/or as the unity of Parā, Parāparā and Aparā. These yāgas are (i) that of [Tri-]śūleśvarī in the first ṣaṭka, and those of (ii) Mahāparā, (iii) Parā-Uttarakālī (/Tricakreśvarī), and (iv) Trīśīrṣā (/ Bhairavānanā) in the fourth. Their visualizations are as follows.

(122) See JayadYāT 1.11.32-39.

Śūleśvarī :¹²³

He should trace the trident so that its cusps face east or north. In the centre between the lateral cusps he should draw a square eleven finger breadths by eleven. In a circle centred on the tip of the central cusp ... there should be a lotus with eight petals, a 'hub' and sixteen filaments. He should colour as before. On this lotus he should worship the goddess [Śūleśvarī, visualizing her as] adorned with a mass of three-eyed serpents, open-mouthed and fanged, shining with the colour of lamp-black, carrying in her hands a knife, a skull-bowl, a great trident and a skull-staff, richly decked with all manner of adornment, her body white with the ashes [of the cremated], sitting on [the shoulders of] Ananta..... Then, having drawn three ... on the cusps he should install upon them the three goddesses [Parā, Parāparā and Aparā].

Mahāparā :¹²⁴

The white goddess Mahāparā (the Great Parā), the supreme Kālasaṃkarṣaṇī,¹²⁵ three-eyed and single-faced, upon a white lotus, sitting on [the shoulders of] a white [Sadāśiva] Transcended, finely dressed in white garments, four-armed, beautiful, lean-limbed, adorned with serpents, with a serpent as her sacred thread, with serpents as bracelets about her upper arms...

Parā - Uttarakālī :¹²⁶

Eighteen-syllabled, terrible, eager to devour the three worlds, bestowers of all

(123) JayadYāmT 1. 26. 18c-23: *prāgagraṃ vartayec chūlam(ṃm) athavottarakāṇṭhakam // 18 // prākūra śrīgamadhyasthaṃ(h) kṣetra <ṃ> rudrāṅgulam samam / vandhyāstām madhyaśrīgāgravṛttāspavibhāgagam // 19 // aṣṭapatram sanābhīm tu daśaṣaṭkesarākulam // pūrvavat pūrayet tad dhi tatra devīm prapūjayet // 20 // karālasarpa(sarpa)cakreṇa daṣṭrīṇo(ā)gratrickaṣuṣā / rājītām (rājītām) aṅjanābhāsivarṇena ca sphurattviṣa(ā)m // 21 // kartrikādya(kṛtikāla)mahāśūlakhaṭvāṅgodyatapāṇinīm / sarvabhūṣaṇabhūṣādhyaṃ bhasmapāṇḍuvapuṣmatīm // 22 // anantāsanam āruḍhām ... // 31 // atha śrīgatrāye trīṇi kṛtya cāmīkarāṇi tu / tatra devitraya(aṃ)nyāsam kuryād...*

(124) JayadYāmT ṣaṭka 4, folio 115v1-3: śuklā <ṃ> mahāparā <ṃ> devī <īm> kālasaṃkarṣaṇī <ṃ> parām / trīnetrām ekavaktrām ca śvetapadmopari sthūlām / śvetapretasamāruḍhām śvetāmbharavibhūṣitām / caturbhujām suvapuṣām kṛśāṅgīm sarpamaṇḍitām / vyālayajñopavitīm ca vyālāṅgadavibhūṣitām /

(125) The form -saṃkarṣiṇī is better Sanskrit and used by the commentators. In the āgamas themselves we find -saṃkarṣaṇī.

(126) JayadYāmT ṣaṭka 4 folio 136r 2-4 (parotta <ra> kālīsādhanaapaṭalaḥ, verses 13c-17b): *aṣṭādaśākṣarā ghorā trailokyagrāsaghasmarā // 13 // sarvasiddhikarī raudrā cakramelāpasiddhidā / dhyayohuya ghanākāśaprakhyā paramabhaivarī // 14 // kṛśāṅgī ghoravadanā viśvarūpā mahaujasā / mahāpretasamāruḍhā sarvayudhakarodyatā // 15 // parāparātha* siddhis, fearsome, granter of success in rites to summon the hoards of celestial Yoginīs, Bhairavī Supreme, [dark] as a sky filled with rain-laden clouds (?), lean-limbed, her face terrible to behold, omniform, of vast strength, sitting on [the shoulders of Sadāśiva] the Great Transcended, holding all manner of weapons in her hands. He should visualize Parā, Parāparā and Aparā, and then, O Umā (?), this supreme goddess above them. And those [three should be visualized] on [the cusps of a] trident, seated [likewise] on Sadāśivas.

Trīśīrṣā (Bhairavānanā) :¹²⁷

She should be visualized black as a crow, as a swarm of bees or the clouds at the world's end, three-faced, awesome, eighteen-armed, roaring horribly as she destroys the universe, mounted emaciated and terrible on [the shoulders of] the Great Transcended with various weapons in her hands, her limbs clad with [a skirt made of] strings of bones, and her hair flowing upwards.

If any one of these four is likely to be akin to the lost icon it is the ash-white Śūleśvarī, carrying the knife and skull-bowl, the trident and the skull-staff. For her yāga is taught as one of a basic set of five through which one may be initiated into the cult of the seventeen-syllabled mantra of Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī.¹²⁸ This mantra, as we have seen, is virtually identical with the mantra of Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī taught in the Devayāmala. The mantras of the other three Kālasaṃkarṣiṇīs are quite unrelated to it. That of Mahāparā is the seed-syllable jhphrūṃ.¹²⁹ Parā-Uttarakālī's is hrīm pare parāpare apare tricakreśvari vraṇ phaṭ phaṭ.¹³⁰ That of Trīśīrṣā / Bhairavānanā is svām hrīm svāmīni jaya vidyeśvari cakreśvari bhairavānane hrīm svām phaṭ phaṭ phaṭ.¹³¹

8.2. Ekāntavāsini (/ Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī)

This identification gains some support from an unexpected source, the practical handbooks for the non-Tantric, domestic vā śuddhā hy aparātha parātha vā / evaṃ dhyāyē devadevīm tāsām prsthe sthitām ume(?ama) // 16 // tās ca śūlasthītā devyo mahāpretakṛtāsanāh(ā) / The name Uttarakālī is given by the JayadYāmMUddh, folio 61v 7; and I have restored the colophon of the chapter (parotta <ra> kālīsādhana-) accordingly.

(127) JayadYāmT ṣaṭka 4, folio 198r 1-2 (bhairavavyāptividhipaṭ, vv. 46c-48): kṛṣṇā <ṃ> kākālīnīhārakālamegha(tha)samadyutim // 46 // trivaktrām saṃ(sā)smared raudrām aṣṭādaśabhujānvitām / sukrṣām bhīmanīrhrādhāradīnīm viśvaghāṭṭanīm // 47 // mahāpretakṛtāvasthām nānāpraharaṇodyatām / halamālāvanaddhāṅgīm ūrdhvakeśām bhayānakām // 48 //

(128) The first and basic ṣaṭka of the JayadYāmT teaches a primary yāga of the seventeen-syllabled mantra (paṭ 15 [+ 11 (kālasaṃkarṣaṇīvidyoddhārah)]), and four alternatives: the yāgas of (i) Bhairava or Bhairavī and six Yoginīs (paṭ 19), (ii) Lakṣmibhāṭṭarīkā and sixteen Kālīs (paṭ 21), (iii) Śūleśvarī and the three goddesses Parā, Parāparā and Aparā (paṭ 26), and (iv) Vajreśvarī (paṭ 28).

(129) Raised at JY 4, ṣaṭka 4, folios 115v7-116r1.

(130) Raised ibid., folios 135v6-136r2.

(131) Raised ibid., folio 188r 3-7.

(grhya-) rituals of the Kashmirian brahmins; for an icon of Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī similar to that of Śūleśvarī has made its way into these rituals from the Tantric tradition. The presentation of offerings to series of mother-goddesses (mātrkāpūjā) represented by idols, paintings, or small heaps of unhusked barley is standard in smārta Vedic ritual, being a constituent preliminary of the presentation of offerings to the Rejoicing Ancestor-deities (nāṇḍimukhaśrāddham) which is itself a constituent preliminary of all such auspicious ceremonies as those of birth, investiture, marriage and the consecration of homes (veśmapratiṣṭhā), temples and idols (pratiṣṭhā);¹³² but in Kashmir this exoteric goddess-worship has been moulded to reflect the prestigious Tantric cults that flourished in this region. The mothers, who are usually just a linear series, are worshipped here in Tantric fashion as the emanations or retinue of a central goddess. In the standard handbooks for these domestic rituals this central goddess is termed Ekāntavāsini ('She-who-dwells-in-solitude') without further information;¹³³ but a versified account of the cult found in a birch-bark Kāśmīrikakarmakāṇḍapaddhati identifies Ekāntavāsini as the goddess Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī.¹³⁴ It also gives a dhyāna:¹³⁵

One should visualize her seated on a lotus, one-faced, eight-armed, three-eyed and richly adorned, displaying in her hands a skull-bowl and skull-staff, a

(132) See DhKoś 3, III, pp. 1695-1707 for this smārta mātrkāpūjā.

(133) See VivV 1-2 (kanyāsaṃskāraśāstrī) and VedKalpD 136 (veśmapratiṣṭhāśāstrī). According to these texts of the Kashmirian tradition the mothers are grouped into five sets of seven and one pair: (i) Brāhmī, Māheśvarī, Kaumārī, Vaiṣṇavī, Vārāhī, Nārasimhī and Aindrī; (ii) Gaurī, Padmā, Śaci, Medhā, Sāvitrī, Vijayā and Jayā; (iii) Devasenā, Svadhā, Svāhā, the Mātr̥s, the Lokamātr̥s, Dhṛti and Tuṣṭi; (iv) Puṣṭi and Ātmadevatā; (v) Lalitā, Umā, Gaurī, Ambikā, Salilāśrayā, Bhagāhī and Bhagākṣi; and (vi) Anumati, Rākā, Sinivalī, Kūhū, Dhātrī, Sarveśvarī and Anneśvarī. These are worshipped in (i) seven walnuts, (ii) seven vertical lines of melted butter (= the vasor dhārā, poured down the surface of a low wall [see DhKoś 3, III, 1708-1710]); (iii) a coloured and spotted veil (worn by women on festive occasions [Kashm. ték' - pūc'; see Grierson 1049a (under tyok')], (iv) oneself, (v) the branches of the representation of the wishing-tree (kalpavṛkṣaḥ) plastered on the wall [Kashm. diwāta - mūn'; see Grierson 265a (under diwath)], and (vi) seven balls of cooked rice [Kashm. diwāta - gū'; see ibid.]. Ekāntavāsini is worshipped in the midst of these in an earthenware pot filled with water, fruit etc. [Kashm. diwāta - wō'; see ibid.]. See VedKalpD 136. An outline drawing of this arrangement can be seen at KarmK 4, iii and xxiii. Outside Kashmir the norm is to worship Gaṇeśa + the mothers in groups (ii) to (iv); see DhKoś 3, III, 1696a 22-24, b 3-9 etc. The latter are either fourteen or sixteen, in accordance with whether one includes the Mātr̥s and Lokamātr̥s mentioned in the verses listing the recipients (mātaro lokamātaraḥ). Some take these plural nouns as merely qualifying the fourteen singular names. According to Śrīdatta and others, the mother called Ātmadevatā in this list is whoever is one's (ātma-) family or personal goddess (kuladevatā, iṣṭadevatā); see ibid. 1695b 3; 1696b 1, 10; 1702a 11.

(134) KāśmKarmKPadh folio 295r14-15, 18-19: ekāntī d <e> vat <ā> yā <sā> kālasaṃkarṣaṇī parā / ... saṃkarṣaṇī nāma devī ekāntī hy aṭha socyate /.

(135) KāśmKarmKPadh folio 295v19-296r3: ekavaktṛāṃ cāṣṭabhujāṃ trinetṛābharaṇair yutām / kapālakhaṭvāṅgadharāṃ pāśāṅkuśakarāpitām varadābhayaḥastām ca khadgaśūladharāṃ śubhām / śuddhasphaṭikavarnābhām padmārūdhām vicintayet /.

noose and a goad, the gestures of generosity and protection, a sword and a trident, shining white as crystal.

Evidently this is closely related to the Śūleśvarī icon of the seventeen-syllabled vidyā of Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī. Śūleśvarī has a knife where Ekāntavāsini has a sword; but with the exception of this minor difference the four weapons attributed to Śūleśvarī by the Jayadrathayāmala are the attributes of the four principal hands of Ekāntavāsini.

8.3. Siddhalakṣmī

I have encountered no representation of this Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī, either painted or sculpted. However two eleventh or twelfth century Kashmirian bronzes (Plates 1 and 2)¹³⁶ depict a form of the goddess which differs only slightly from that of Ekāntavāsini Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī. She certainly belongs to the same iconic type. She is five-faced rather than one-faced, and ten-armed rather than eight-armed; but she too is white and eight of her ten hands show the same attributes as Ekāntavāsini — only a book and a hatchet (ṭaṅkaḥ) are added. Naturally, the colour of her body is not represented in a bronze. However, the deity may be identified as Siddhalakṣmī on the evidence of the visualization text for this goddess found in the Kashmirian handbooks of Tantric ritual;¹³⁷ and these record her (136) The term Kashmirian here includes neighbouring areas within the sphere of Kashmirian culture, these two bronzes being said to be from Kangra and Himachal Pradesh (Pal 1975: 226, 228). For reproductions see Chhabra 1966; Sharma 1971; Pal 1975, plates 89 and 90 (pp. 226-229); and Mitchell, Lampert and Holland 1982, 71 (colour plate of exhibit 455). Chhabra (1966) identifies the image as Svachchandaḥhairavi, consort of Svachchandaḥhairava. But that deity's consort is not Svachchandaḥhairavi but Aghoreśvarī, is eighteen-armed and has quite different hand-attributes; see SvT 2. 88-97b and 114c-116, which describe Svachchandaḥhairava in detail and his consort briefly, saying (115cd) that her form is identical with his [with regard to hand-attributes and other such particulars].

(137) AgnikPadh folio 73r 7-: devīm śuddhasphaṭikadhavalām pañcavaktṛāṃ trinetṛāṃ dorbhir yuktām daśabhir abhītaḥ śobhitām ratnahārāḥ / kādyam khadgam sṛṣṇam amasṛam śūlam acchācchadhāraṃ sārāt sārām varam anavaram dakṣaḥastair vahantīm // utkhaṭvāṅgam khaṭhinavikaṭam ṭaṅkam ūrjasvikaṅkam pāṣam jñānamṛtarasamayam pustakam cābhayaṃ ca / kāmam vāmāḥ śubhakaratalair bibhratīm viśuvavandyām padmapretopari kṛtapadām siddhalakṣmīm namāmi //. This same text is included in the DevidhyRatnM, p. 68 with mundaṃ wrongly for khadgam in the first verse. AgnikPadh has the following verse to be recited as one makes the final, full oblation to the goddess (pūrnādhyānam): khaṭvāṅgakādyavaradābhayaśūlaṭaṅkapāśāṅkuśāṣivarapustakahastapadmām (padmahastām) / pañcānāṇam daśa (vasu) against sense and AgnikPadh²) bhujām giriśādhirūdhām tvām dhyāyato 'sti bhuvī kasya narasya bhītiḥ //. The two bronzes in question agree with these dhyānas, except that the former do not adhere to the latter's distribution of the hand-attributes to left and right. The hands on the viewer's right show from top to bottom a goad, a manuscript, a noose, the gesture of generosity and a hatchet (ṭaṅkaḥ). Those on the left show a sword, a trident, a skull-staff, a skull-bowl and the gesture of protection. The bronzes provide a clear illustration of the meaning of padmapretopari kṛtapadām in the Kashmirian visualization text, i.e. 'resting on a lotus and the Transcended [Sadāsiva]'.

whiteness, as do the slightly different dhyānas employed for her cult in the Kathmandu valley.¹³⁸ The similarity between the icons of Siddhalakṣmī and Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī is backed by a close association in ritual practice. Siddhalakṣmī is taught in the Jayadrathayāmala, a work devoted to the cults of various forms of Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī;¹³⁹ in the Kālasaṃkarṣanimata the worship of Siddhalakṣmī is a constituent of the cult of that goddess;¹⁴⁰ and in the Nepalese text of the annual Kaula pavitṛārohaṇa ritual of the Uttarāmnāya the icon of Siddhalakṣmī is associated with a seventeen-syllabled vidyā which is evidently a variant of the basic Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī mantra.¹⁴¹ Furthermore, her cult in Nepal is often combined with that of Guhyakālī. The cult of that goddess is a product of the tradition of Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī worship represented by the Jayadrathayāmala; and it incorporates the associated tradition of the Krama.¹⁴²

9. ABHINAVAGUPTA ON VISUALIZATION

9.1. In his account of the regular cult (nityakarma) performed by the officiant as he prepares to carry out a ceremony of initiation (dīkṣā) Abhinavagupta has the following to say on the subject of the installation (nyāsaḥ) and visualization of the three goddesses:¹⁴³

[The officiant] should install the three Bhairavas and the three goddesses as follows : Bhairavasadbhāva [jh-kṣ-hūm (TĀ 30. 16c - 17b)] on the central[lotus], Ratiśekhara [r-y-l-vūm (ibid. 10c - 11b)] on the [lotus to his] right, and

(138) See TridaśaḍāmPratyāṅgVNT folios 2v2-3r3 (Tridaśaḍāmaramahātānta), 19r6-v4 (Siddhalakṣmīmata), 28v6-29r5 (Umāyāmala), 33r4-5 (Umāyāmalapūjākrama), 43r6-44r2 (Siddhalakṣmīpāñcaśāṭaka), 73v2 (Kālasaṃkarṣanimata); GuhyKāPūV folio 3v3-5 (Siddhalakṣmīpūjāpaddhati); UttĀmnPavĀrohV folio 8v3-5. A fine Newar bronze of Siddhalakṣmī (locally 'Siddhilakṣmī'), which follows the dhyāna of the Kālasaṃkarṣanimata, is reproduced in Macdonald and Vergati Stahl 1979, 50.

(139) JayadYāmT saṅka 2, last kalpa.

(140) See TridaśaḍāmPratyVNT folios 59r1-83r 6.

(141) UttĀmnPavĀrohV.

(142) See, e.g., GuhyKāPūV for this combination, also TantrDigUnkN, a Nepalese digest of Tantric sources on the cults of these two goddesses. On the Uttarāmnāya, Guhyakālī and the Krama see Sanderson 1988, 682-686. See ibid. Fig. 36.6 for a drawing of Guhyakālī following Newar models.

(143) TĀ 15. 323b-329b: ...parikalpayet / madhye bhairavasadbhāvaṃ dakṣiṇe ratiśekharam // 323 // navātmānaṃ vāmatas taddevīva bhairavatrayam / madhye parāṃ pūṃmacandra-pratimāṃ dakṣiṇe punaḥ // 324 // parāparāṃ raktavarṇāṃ kiṃcidugrāṃ na bhīṣaṇāṃ / aparāṃ vāmaśṛṅge tu bhīṣaṇāṃ kṛṣṇaṇḍalāṃ // 325 // prāgvad dvidhātṛa ṣoḍhaiva nyāso dehe yathā kṛtāḥ / tataḥ sāmkalpikāṃ yuktaṃ vapur āsāṃ vicintayet // 326 // kṛtyabhedānusāreṇa dvicatuhṣaḍbhujādīkam / kapāśaśulakhaṭvāṅgavarābhayaghaṭādi(kaṃ) // 327 // vāmadakṣiṇasamsthānacitratvam(vat) parikalpayet / vastuto viśvarūpās tā devyo bodhātmikā yataḥ // 328 // anavacchinnaśāśvāṇaśārāḥ syur apavṛtaye /

The goddess Siddhalakṣmī. Panjab, Kangra Valley, 11th-12th c. Bronze. Height: 22.2cm. Pan-Asian Collection.

The goddess Siddhalakṣmī. Panjab, Kangra Valley, 11th-12th c.
Bronze. Height: 36,7 cm. National Museum, New-Delhi.

Navātman [r-h-r-kṣ-m-l-v-yūṃ (ibid. 11c 12b)] on the [lotus to his] left; then Parā [white] as the full moon on the central [lotus], Parāparā on [her] right, red and somewhat ferocious (*kiṃcidugrā*¹⁴⁴) but not terrifying, and Aparā on the [lotus of the] cuspid on her left, terrifying and red-black. He should then subject them to the same double six-fold mantra-installation to which he has already subjected his body.¹⁴⁵ Thereafter he may contemplate [the goddesses in detail, visualizing] whichever of their desiderative (sāṃkalpikam) forms¹⁴⁶ may be appropriate, i.e. with two, four, six or more arms, according to which of the various goals of worship he is pursuing; and [in that case] he should variously dispose in their left and right hands such attributes as the skull-bowl (kapālam), the trident (triśūlam), the skull-staff (khaṭvāṅgaḥ), the gestures of generosity (varaḥ) and protection (abhayaṃ), and the jar [of nectar] (ghaṭaḥ).¹⁴⁷

In reality these goddesses are consciousness itself. They are therefore embodied as everything that exists [rather than in any single form]. Consequently, if they are to bestow liberation [through their worship] they must be [contemplated as being] essentially this same, unlimited,¹⁴⁸ uninflected consciousness (cinmātram).

Evidently Abhinavagupta considers the greater part of the details with which we have been concerned to be relevant only to those who are performing desiderative rites. Since the particulars of these rites are outside the scope of the Tantrāloka he does no more than exemplify these details (the number of arms and the attributes in the hands) without telling us which combinations fit which goal.¹⁴⁹ The performer of nondesiderative worship is required to visualize the goddesses, but only, it seems, in their most basic outline: he is to grasp their colours and moods alone; and then to submerge these icons within the entirely aniconic contemplation that the goddesses are ultimately none other than the imageless power of consciousness itself.

(144) For kiṃcidagrām (ed.) read kiṃcidugrām following sense and MālvijUT 8. 73b.

(145) See TĀ 15. 239c-258 (viśeṣanyāsaḥ).

(146) I take the term sāṃkalpikam here to be synonymous with kāmyam and therefore to refer to those forms of the icon which are inflected for contemplation in desiderative cults (kāmyakarma).

(147) The edition of 327c-328b has kapālaśūlakhaṭvāṅgavarābhayaḥghaṭādikam // vāma-dakṣiṇasamsthānacitravāt parikalpayet /. But this would mean that Abhinavagupta required the sādhaka to 'accomplish the skull-bowl, trident etc. because of the diversity of left and right positions.' This is absurd. I therefore emend -ghaṭādikam to ghaṭādiḥ, and -citravāt to -citravam.

(148) By 'unlimited' (anavacchinna-) he means 'not circumscribed by place, time or form,' see, e.g., ŚivSūVim on 1.1.

(149) See TĀ 26. 11bd: nityanaimittike bruve(dhruve) / kāmyavarjaṃ yataḥ kāmāś citrāś citrābhyupāyakāḥ //, 'I shall teach regular and incidental ritual, but not the desiderative; for desires being manifold are accomplished by an equal diversity of means.' My emendation of the edition's dhruve to bruve gives sense at the cost of minimal emendation, since ba and dha are easily confused in the Śāradā script.

9.2. This prescription is idiosyncratic. The norm is that a Tantric cult, whether Saiddhāntika or not, has a goal-neutral, common form of its deity (sādhāraṇam / sāmānyam rūpam), which serves in all modes of worship, or in all but the desiderative, that is, in all regular (nityam) and incidental (naimittikam) rites, the latter including the ceremonies of initiation (dīkṣā). Where specific forms are taught for specific purposes they are generally modifications of this neutral archetype.¹⁵⁰

It might be thought that Abhinavagupta's dichotomy between nondesiderative and desiderative visualizations differs from this norm simply in this, that the nondesiderative archetype is an inchoate base to which desiderative details are added, while in the normal practice the secondary forms modify an archetype that is certainly fully detailed and is often more elaborate than they are. Thus the neutral and all-purpose image in the Siddhānta is the ten-armed Sadāśiva combining Īśāna, Tatpuruṣa, Aghora, Vāmadeva and Sadyojāta (the personifications of the five brahmamantras).¹⁵¹ One or other of these component deities is worshipped if one seeks a particular goal.¹⁵² While the composite Sadāśiva is five-faced and ten-armed, they are each single-faced and have two, four, eight, two and two arms respectively.¹⁵³ However, this difference is the consequence of a quite different perspective. In the norm the neutral image is all-purpose (*sarvārtham*¹⁵⁴): it is not limited to the seekers of liberation. On the contrary, a icon for the liberationists is included among the modifications.¹⁵⁵ Thus while in the norm the (150) See Mrg KP 3.41-45b and Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha's commentary on the icon of Sadāśiva and its variants in the Siddhānta. In the cult of Svachchandaḥairava too the basic image is goal neutral; see SvT 2. 88b-97; 97ab (sarvakāmaphalapradaṁ). It coexists with such desiderative variants as Vyādhibhaktasvacchanda, Koṭarākṣasvacchanda, Jvarasvacchanda and Vṛddhasvacchanda, for whom see SvT 9 (Koṭarākṣa-), SvTU 4 (9) 31¹⁷-32⁸ (Vyādhibhaktā-), and TantrColl folio 421r6-v3 (Jvara- Vyādhibhaktā- and Vṛddha-).

(151) These pan-Śaiva mantras were inherited from the pre-āgamic Pāsupata tradition, and ultimately from the Yajurveda (Taittirīyāranyaka 10. 43-47).

(152) See Mrg KP 3. 45-49c and commentary.

(153) See ĪśānSivGDP KP 12. 34-39.

(154) Mrg KP 3. 48ab: sarvasiddhyai sādhāraṇam; 44d: sarvārtham sāmudāyikam.

(155) See, e.g., Mrg KP 3. 45: tac ca sādhāraṇam rūpam vaiśeṣikam ato 'nyathā / muktyartham sphaṭikākāraṁ prasannaṁ cetasā smaret //. The same is seen in non-Saiddhāntika traditions. It occurs, for example, in the cult of Mantramātrkā, one of the four Pratyāṅgirā deities of the JayadYāmT. Having described her as black, four-armed, carrying skull-bowl, skull-staff, noose and cudgel, and mounted on Sadāśiva, the text gives alternative colours for purposes other than that of countering malevolent magic (her basic function), including white for liberation; see JayadYāmT ṣaṭka 3, paṭala 9 (pratyāṅgirāvidhiḥ), 39c-43b: dhyāyet kalpāntakālāgninīlakṣapra(vra)timabhiṣāṇam // 39 // *kāk(l)ālikokilādīnām nibhā kāntīm subhairavām / caturbhujām ekavīraṁ netratrayabhāsūrām* // 40 // mahāpretasamā-rūdhām pātrakhaṭvāṅgadharīṇīm / pāśamudgarahastām tām vasārudhīralampatām // 41 // movement from archetype to ectype is from the general to the particular in all its varieties, here it is a movement from the formless nonduality of the uninflected consciousness sought by the liberationist (mumukṣuḥ) into the plurality and detail required by the class of initiates which seeks specific goals through desiderative worship (bubhukṣuḥ).

9.3.1. One may wonder why, if this interpretation is correct, Abhinavagupta did not exclude form entirely from worship for liberation. That this was the direction of his thought is evident enough from his interpretation of the Parātrīṃśikā on the subject of the regular worship of Parā in the Anuttara system. That text describes the goddess in this context as "full of all the tattvas and beautified with all [manner of] adornments".¹⁵⁶ He refuses to allow the second half of this description (sarvābharāṇabhūṣitām) its literal meaning. Instead he raises it on to the level of the first by forcing it to yield a purely non-visual, metaphysical sense. This is achieved by means of an ad hoc etymology (nirvacanam). The known (rūḍha-) lexical sense of the word ābharāṇam ('adornment') is rejected in favour of one constructed etymologically by reactivating the meanings of its constituent parts: bharāṇam from √ bhr 'to support' in the meaning 'the action of supporting', and the preverb ā- in the meaning 'entirely' (ā samantād bharāṇam). The word sarva- ('all'), which in the literal sense ('all adornments') is in apposition to -ābharāṇa-, is now taken in the locative (in a sap-tamītatpuruṣa compound). Thus where the text intended us to understand that the goddess is 'beautified with all [manner of] adornments' Abhinavagupta instructs us to read 'beautified by total support in everything.' He explains that 'total support in everything' (sarvābharāṇam) is the fact that as autonomous Consciousness she establishes identity with the totality (sarvātmikaraṇam) in everything (sarvatra), even in the smallest constituent of matter (paramāṇ-āv api)¹⁵⁷. He concludes and explains:¹⁵⁸

So it is that there is no mention [in this text] of the visualization of weapons mahodagrām mahābhīmām kṣayamārutānisvanām / evamvidhā <m>yantranāśe kṛtyākhārkho-damardane // 42 // cintayet paramēśānīm abhicārupramardane / ... mokṣe śuddhendurūpiṇīm /. This visualization is in the Kashmirian AgnikPaddh, folio 74r with certain variants, notably kākalīkōkilādīnām tulyakāntinibhopamām / caturbhujām ekavaktrām... / śvetapreta-samārūdhām ...

(156) PT 30cd: sarvatattvasusampūrṇām sarvābharāṇabhūṣitām //.

(157) PTViv 278⁸⁻⁷(265¹³⁻¹⁴): sarvatra paramāṇāv api yad ā samantād ābharāṇam sarvātmikaraṇam.

(158) PTViv 278⁸⁻¹⁰(265¹⁶⁻¹⁸): ata eva viśiṣṭākṛtyāyudhādīdhyānam eva noktaṁ tasya nirmeyatvāt.

or of any of the other features with specific form [that usually constitute the icon of a Tantric mantra-deity]; and the reason for this is that [all] such [visualizations] are [merely] the creations [of that goddess, and therefore inadequate as representations of the goddess herself].

9.3.2. The same formlessness is taught in the Tantrāloka, though at a distance from the part of that work which is devoted to the Trika's rituals. For in the introductory chapter, in which he gives an outline of his soteriology, he explains that:¹⁵⁹

The inner creativity (pratibhā) which is the essence of the unseconded Lord Consciousness (saṁvinnāthasya) is worshipped [by sādhakas] as limited configurations of that consciousness's surging power; and these are either pacific (saumyam) or terrible (anyat) [according to the worshipper's purpose].

He exemplifies such inflected worship with a sādhana whose purpose is to restore health and vigour (puṣṭiḥ, āpyāyanam) and then sums up his position as follows:¹⁶⁰

The [same] Lord of the Universe, Bhairava as Consciousness, is worshipped specifically by seekers of lesser goals, and non-specifically by those whose only purpose is liberation.

The non-specific form of this Bhairava is, of course, consciousness itself, the impersonal identity of the initiate,¹⁶¹ uncircumscribed by place or time, and formless.¹⁶²

9.4. Why, then, does Abhinavagupta allow the goddesses form in his account of their regular, liberationist cult in his Tantrāloka? The answer to this question is surely that he has gone as far as he can in this direction given the constraints imposed on him by the Mālinīvijayottaratantra, the āgama of which the Tantrāloka is both

(159) TĀ 1. 116: ekasya saṁvinnāthasya hy āntarī pratibhā tanuḥ / saumyam vānyan mītaṁ saṁvidūrmicakram upāsyate //

(160) TĀ 1.123: yasmād viśveśvaro bodhabhairavaḥ samupāsyate / avacchedānavacchidbhyāṁ bhogamokṣārthibhir janaiḥ //

(161) This view that the deity to be worshipped is the undifferentiated identity of the worshipper would seem to point to the transcendence of worship itself. Jayaratha has it attacked by the Vedic ritualists on precisely these grounds in his commentary on TĀ 1. 124c-125b: nanu devatoddeśena dravyatyāgo yāga ity ukteḥ dravyatyāgārtham uddiṣṭaiva devatā bhavati na ca bodhaikarūpasya svātmātattvasya tathātenoddeśo 'stīti(?) sti) katham asya yājayatvam / 'Surely [, the Mīmāṃsaka will say,] 'worship', or 'offering' (yāgaḥ) is defined as the formal abandonment of an owned object with the naming of a deity [as the recipient]. It follows from this definition that nothing can be the deity [in an offering] which is not named [in the recited text of the ritual] for the purpose of such abandonment. Now that identity of one's self, whose only substance is consciousness, is [nowhere] named for such a purpose. How, then, can it be the 'recipient of the offering.'?

(162) See TĀ 4. 196-199.

commentary (śloka-vārtikam) and Paddhati.¹⁶³ For the core of the passage from the Tantrāloka translated above on the installation and visualization of the deities is a paraphrase of the following verses of that text:¹⁶⁴

Having visualized the [three] Śiva-mantras [Bhairavasadbhāva etc.] who are to be installed first, he should visualize the Śakti Parā on the central [lotus] and the other two [Śaktis] to her right and left: Parāparā, with the appearance proper to her, red and mighty, adopting whatever form accords with the worshipper's desire,¹⁶⁵ somewhat ferocious but not terrifying; the goddess Aparā on the [lotus of the] left cuspid, terrifying and red-black, adopting whatever form accords with the worshipper's desire, banishing the ills of her devotees; and the goddess Parā [on the central lotus], nourishing, shining [white] as countless moons. Then when he has done the six fold installation of the Śakti-mantras...

Abhinavagupta, then, could hardly prescribe non-visual meditation on the goddesses in place of the usual visualization without openly contradicting his source.

9.5.1. Yet he manages an interpretation of these verses which goes a long way towards that goal, by exploiting the circumstance that the Mālinīvijayottara states no more than the basic characteristics of the three goddesses before adding that these may be adjusted [in desiderative worship (kāmyakarma)] in order to accomplish specific aims.

9.5.2. Now it does not say that these inflected forms are more developed than the neutral archetypes. Nor is that implied by the brevity of the descriptions. It is true that these cover only the goddesses' colours and moods. But such brevity is a common feature

(163) See TĀ 1.14-17.

(164) MālVijUT 8. 71d-74: (anucintayet) ... pūrvanyāsaṁ śivātmakam // 71 // tato madhye parāṁ śaktiṁ dakṣiṇottarayor duvayam / parāparāṁ svarūpeṇa raktavarṇāṁ mahābālāṁ // 72 // icchārūpadharāṁ dhyātvā kiṁcidugrāṁ na bhīṣaṇāṁ / aparāṁ vāmaśṛṅge tu bhīṣaṇāṁ kṛṣṇaṅgalāṁ // 73 // icchārūpadharāṁ devīm praṇatārtivināśinīm / parāṁ cāpyāyanīm devīm candrakotyaṇṇataprabhāṁ // 74 // śaḍvidhe 'pi kṛte śākte mūrtiḥ yādāu api ...

(165) This translates icchārūpadharāṁ. My translation of this rather vague expression (lit. 'desire-form-assuming') follows, e.g., NeT 10.14b-16b, where its meaning is clear: sādhakas tam anusmaret // 14b // ... icchārūpadharāṁ devam icchāsiddhiphalapradam / yādṛśenaiva vapuṣā ... anusmaret / (14b) ... icchārūpadharāṁ bhajate rūpaṁ ... / 'He should visualize ... the god in whatever form accords with his desire, [that is], as the bestower of the siddhi he desires. He adopts any form in which a sādhaka visualizes him.' Kṣemarāja ad loc. analyses icchārūpadhara- as follows: cidbhairava eva tattatsiddhyabhilāṣukatattatsādhakāśāyēcchayā tat tad rūpam grhṇāti arthaḥ / 'The meaning is that Bhairava as Consciousness takes on [< dharah] various forms [< rūpa-] through desire [< icchā-], that is, according to the intention of this or that sādhaka seeking this or that siddhi.'

in āgamic accounts of ritual, particularly in texts like the Mālinīvijayottara which say that they are based on more detailed sources, in this case the Siddhayogeśvarimata.¹⁶⁶ The normal procedure when interpreting such passages for practical application is to take any absence of information to mean that the text is intended to be supplemented from the nearest equal or subordinate scriptural source within the ordered whole of the Śaiva revelation. Thus, for example, the Śaiva who follows the ritual of the Mālinīvijayottara finds that this āgama instructs him to make offerings to the deities that guard the entrance to his place of worship but does not indicate their names or their positioning about the door. This might be taken to mean that he is to worship them collectively, forming a single mantra in which they are named simply as 'the door-guardians' (om dām dvārapālebhya namaḥ*). In fact one is to read in the names and positions of the deities from the Triśirobhairavatantra, a work which like the Mālinīvijayottara belongs to the Trika system of ritual. The method, according to Jayaratha, is always to search the canon until one requires no further information in order to translate one's text into practice (apekṣānivr̥ttiḥ). If one does not find what one needs in texts on the same level, one is to go to the one beneath it; and if one does not find it there, one is to descend to the one below that, until one reaches the āgamas of the Siddhānta, the level of the greatest generality. In this hierarchy of texts the higher is the more specialized: it needs to say only what is not available to be read in from below.¹⁶⁷ So if a silence within a superordinate text is not to initiate this process of supplementation, it must be prevented from doing so by some specific or general instruction.

9.5.3. No such instruction occurs in the Mālinīvijayottara to affect the interpretation of its visualization texts. Abhinavagupta might appear, then, to have chosen to forget this principle of automatic supplementation in his eagerness to achieve an interpretation of the text which makes room for the ideal of imageless contemplation. There is, however, no need to assume this. If the Mālinīvijayottara is at the highest level of the Śaiva scriptural corpus, as he maintained, it ought after all to show some awareness of this ideal. For there are other texts in the subcorpus of the Trika which advocate it. By grouping the Mālinīvijayottara with these texts he primes it with a predisposition to transcend mere visualization; and this predisposition justifies him in reading its brief description of the goddesses as exhaustive rather than intentionally lacunose, so that even if it does not actually articulate the ideal dichotomy between formless deities and inflected icons which Abhinavagupta finds in the Parātr̥ṃśikā, it nonetheless supports the principle of this dichotomy by teaching that the higher mode of worship practised by the liberationist is at least closer to the formless than that practised by the sādhaka in pursuit of limited goals. And because the text has been read as pointing the worshipper towards this principle Abhinavagupta can claim that it implies that one should be aware as one visualizes these subtler icons that the reality which they embody is nothing other than this same formless power of consciousness. He can require the worshipper to project the icons in his imagination only to dissolve them into the metaphysical concept of his own identity.

9.5.4. This same shift of emphasis from objective image to subjective concept is also required by Abhinavagupta in his account of the summoning and visualization of the deities in the daily cult to be carried out by all initiates.¹⁶⁸ When the worshipper has completed the internal cult which always precedes the external:¹⁶⁹

He should meditate on the cult-platform (sthaṇḍilam), imagining that it is transparent, like a crystal or a pure radiant sky. [Concentrating on these qualities] he should identify it with consciousness. In this [mirror-like] consciousness he should contemplate the images of the deities as reflections and himself as the reflected.¹⁷⁰

(168) All initiates who are competent-and-obliged (adhikṛtaḥ) to perform rituals have this daily duty. Those who are not required to do this or any other Tantric ritual are (i) the subclass of putrakas who have received nirbījā rather than śabījā dīkṣā, and (ii) lokadharmisādhakas. For these and their exemption see TĀ 15. 1-2b and commentary.

(169) TĀ 26. 41-42b: tatas tat sthaṇḍilam vidhravyomasphaṭikanirmalam / bodhātmaṇ samālokyā tatra svam devatāgaṇam // pratibimbatayā paśyed bimbatvena ca bodhataḥ.

(170) Abhinavagupta has expressed himself obscurely here. He could be taken to mean that one is to look upon 'one's deities' (svam devatāgaṇam) as both the reflection (pratibimbatayā) and that which is reflected (bimbatvena ca). This, of course, lacks reference to the self of the worshipper; and the verse would not be relevant to the context in which I have cited it. However, I find the 'self' in svam, taking it in its less common but well attested use as a substantive. In this reading the verb has two objects: svam and devatāgaṇam, 'self' and 'the deities'; the two adverbial expressions pratibimbatayā 'as reflection' and bimbatvena 'as reflected' qualify meditation on these two. But, of course, the order is inverted: it must be the self which one is to see as the reflected (bimbat) and the deities as the reflections, not vice versa. In favour of this interpretation there is the parallel passage in Abhinavagupta's Tantrasāra (179¹⁶18): tatra hr̥ḍye sthaṇḍile vimalamakuravad dhyāte svam eva rūpaṃ yāyadevatācakrābhinnam mūrtibimbitam iva dr̥ṣṭvā... 'Having meditated on that pleasing surface as

(166) See MāVijUT 1.00: TĀ 37. 24c-25b: vidyāpīṭhapradhānam ca siddhayoge(i)śvarimatam // tasyāpi paramaṇ saram mālinīvijayottaram.

(167) See TĀV 3 (4) 279¹-281¹ for this procedure and its application to the reference to the door-guardians at MāVijUT 8. 16a (tatra dvārapatin iṣṭvā...). It hardly needs to be pointed out that this ordering of text-levels in the Kashmirian exegesis corresponds only partly to the actual interrelations between the text-groups in question.

9.6. Thus Abhinavagupta directs the awareness of the worshipper to a point beyond both ritual and devotion. For if the initiate realizes that the deities are nothing less than his own liberated identity, then ritual, which is based on an imagined difference between offerer and recipient, will be superfluous. Nor can his identity be circumscribed by devotion to one deity rather than another, for all will be recognized in their diverse mantras and icons as so many projections of the one autonomous, self-articulating consciousness.

9.7. This doctrine that the forms of the deities in ritual and devotion are merely provisional, to be abandoned at higher levels of practice, did not enter the Trika with Abhinavagupta or his immediate predecessors in Kashmir. It was already fully explicit in the Vijñānabhairavatantra, an āgama which does not deal with ritual but can nonetheless be assigned to the Trika as I have defined it at the beginning of this paper, since it makes it clear that it is the ritual of the Trika that it is transcending. It tells the followers of this system how they must aspire to see their rituals. It begins as follows:¹⁷¹

The goddess said, "From its source in the < Rudrayāmala > / < the union of Rudra and his Śakti >¹⁷² and in scriptures of ever greater essentiality you have taught me, O Lord, the Trika division [of your revelation].¹⁷³ But still a perfect mirror, and having come to see himself on [the surface of] that [mirror] as identical with the series of deities to be worshipped, as though the [visualized] icons [of those deities] were his own reflection..."

(171) VijñBh 1-16: (śrīdevy uvāca /) śrutam deva mayā sarvaṃ rudrayāmalasambhavam / trikabhedam aśeṣeṇa sārāt sāraviḥhāgaśaḥ // 1 // adyāpi na nivṛtto me saṃśayaḥ paramaśūvara / kiṃ rūpaṃ tattvato deva śabdarāśīkalāmayam // 2 // kiṃ vā navātmabhedena bhairave bhairavākṛtau / triśirobhedabhinnaṃ vā kiṃ vā śaktitrayātmakam // 3 // nādadbindumayaṃ vāpi kiṃ candrārḍhanirodhikāḥ / cakrārūḍham anackam vā kiṃ vā śaktisvarūpakam // 4 // parāparāyāḥ sakalam aparāyāś ca vā punaḥ / parāyā yadi tadvat syāt paratvaṃ tad virudhyate // 5 // na hi varṇavibhedena dehabhedena vā bhavet / paratvaṃ niṣkalatvena sakalatve na tad bhavet // 6 // prasādam kuru me nātha niḥśeṣam chinddhi saṃśayam / (bhairava uvāca /) sādhu sādhu tvayā prṣtam tantrasāram idaṃ priye // 7 // gūhanīyatamaṃ bhadre tathāpi kathayāmi te / yat kiṃcit sakalam rūpaṃ bhairavasya prakīrtitam // 8 // tad asāratayā devī vijñeyam śakrajālavat / māyāsvapnopamaṃ caiva gandharvanagaropamam // 9 // dhyānārtham bhrāntabuddhināṃ kriyādambaravartinām / kevalam varṇitam pumsām vikalpanihātātmanām // 10 // tattvato na navātmāsau śabdarāśir na bhairavaḥ / na cāsau triśirā devo na ca śaktitrayātmakāḥ // 11 // nādadbindumayo vāpi na candrārḍhanirodhikāḥ / na cakrārūḍhasambhinno na ca śaktisvarūpakāḥ // 12 // aprabuddhamatinām hi etā bālaviḥhīkikāḥ / mātṛmodakavat sarvaṃ pravṛtyartham udāhṛtam // 13 // dikkālakalanonmuktā deśoddeśāviṣeṣiṇi / vyapadeṣṭum aśakyāśv akathyā paramārthataḥ // 14 // antaḥsvānubhāvānandā vikalponmuktāgocārā / yāvasthā bharitākārā bhairavī bhairavātmanaḥ // 15 // tad vapuṣ tattvato jñeyam vimalam viśvapūraṇam / evaṃvidhe pare tattu kaḥ pūjyaḥ kaś ca tṛpyati // 16 //.

(172) This second interpretation is that of Kṣemarāja ad loc. In favour of the first see VijñBh 162.

(173) Kṣemarāja takes the ascent in essentiality to begin from the SiYogM followed by the MāVijUT; see ad loc.: siddhāmāliniyuttarādi.

my doubts persist. What is the real form of Bhairava the terrible? Is it the [fifty letters of] of Śabdarāśi? Is it Navātman?¹⁷⁴ Is it Triśirobhairava?¹⁷⁵ Is it the three Śaktis [Parā, Parāparā, Aparā]? Is it the Point (binduḥ) and the Resonance (nādaḥ)? Is it the Half-moon, the Impeder and the other [subtle levels of the mantras utterance]?¹⁷⁶ Is it the vowelless (anackam) [consonant] installed in the circle [with each of the vowels in turn]? Is it Śakti?¹⁷⁷ Furthermore if Parā is iconic like Parāparā and Aparā, then the absoluteness (paratvaṃ) [claimed by her name] is contradicted. She cannot be absolute if she has a particular colour and form. To be absolute she must be formless (niṣkala-). She cannot be absolute if she is qualified by form (sakala-). O Lord, favour me. Remove my doubts entirely."

Bhairava replied, "I congratulate you, beloved; for the answer to your question is the very heart of the Tantras. O virtuous one, even though this is the ultimate secret I shall reveal it to you. Know, O goddess, that all the structured forms which I have taught as Bhairava's [in the various scriptures of the Trika] are without essence. They are like rainbows, like the illusions created by magicians, like dreams, like the [imagined] cities of the Gandharva celestials [in the sky]. I have taught them only so that those who are caught up in the empty turmoil of ritual, being confused and overwhelmed by the dichotomies of thought, may have a means of concentrating their awareness in meditation. In reality Bhairava is not Navātman, nor Śabdarāśi, nor the Three-headed [Triśirobhairava], not the three Śaktis. He is not the Point or the Resonance. He is not the Half-moon, the Impeder and the rest. He is not multiplied through entering the wheel [of combinations with the vowels]. Nor is he the [all-encompassing] Śakti [Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī]. For [all] these [forms] are strictly for the unenlightened. I have taught them only as a means of setting people on the right path, as a mother uses threats and sweets to influence her children's behaviour. Know that there is only one 'form' which is ultimately real: the spotless [reality] which fills everything, the state of 'Bhairava' [called] 'Bhairavi' [because it is] absolutely replete (bharitākārā),¹⁷⁸ being beyond determination by direction or time, unlocated, impossible to indicate, ultimately indescribable, blissful with the self's innermost experience

(174) In TĀ Navātman is simply the consort of Aparā, the lowest of the three goddesses. But in SiYogM he is also worshipped as the highest deity, in the heart of the assemblage of Viras and Yoginīs known as the Khecaricakra or Khacakravayūha; see paṭala 20 (folios 35v-42r).

(175) Presumably the text refers to the eponymous deity of the lost Triśirobhairavatantra.

(176) See, e.g., TĀ 1. 63. Abhinavagupta refers here to 'the Dikṣottara and other texts' (62cd); and the Dikṣottara is an āgama of the Siddhānta rather than the Trika. But the passages quoted by Jayaratha in his commentary of 1.63 are also found in the Trika's Tantrasadbhāva (folio 10r).

(177) This probably refers to Kālasaṃkarṣiṇī / Māṭṛsadbhāva, the fourth Śakti, who unites the three goddesses; see, e.g., TĀ 3.68-70b.

(178) I take bharitākārā 'absolutely replete' as an etymology (nirvacanam) from √bhr 'to pourish, to fill' intended to explain why the name Bhairavi, lit. 'consort of Bhairava', is appropriate to (anvārtha-) this transtheistic Absolute. The same etymology of Bhairava / Bhairavi is seen at JayadYāmT ṣaṭka 4 folio 88v 2-3: bharanād bhairaveśvārī; ibid. folio 202v 1: bharanād bhairaveśvaram; TĀ 1.96ab (viśvaṃ bidharti poṣaṇa-pūraṇa) dhāraṇayogena tena ca bhriyate /. I am indebted to Eivind Kahrs [Cambridge] for the emendation pūraṇa- > poṣaṇa-. See Jayaratha ad loc.: bibharti dhārayati poṣayati ca.

of its own identity, free of all thought. Within such an Absolute how can one distinguish a recipient of worship or gratification?"

It is this state of fullness, we are told, this complete centredness in the thoughtless essence of consciousness, rather than the composite images or mantras of ritual, that the Trika scriptures really mean when they speak of the goddess Parā.¹⁷⁹

9.8. The Vijñānabhairava then details one hundred and twelve means of realizing union with this redefined goddess without recourse to ritual. Its closing section (verses 140-163) reaffirms this view of ordinary Tantric worship by translating on to the plane of abstract contemplation the acts of offering, visualizing the deity, cycling the mantras, and so forth, which compose it:¹⁸⁰

The goddess said, "If, O Lord Maheśvara, it is this that is the true form (vapuh) of Parā, then what place can there be in the state you have described for any mantra (japyah) or its repetition? What, Great Lord, could be visualized, worshipped and gratified? How and why would there be oblations into fire (homah) or the presentation of offerings to any other substrate of worship (yāgaḥ)? And what would there be to receive them?" Bhairava replied, "In this [teaching] (atra), doe-eyed one, such ritual procedures (prakriyā) are considered gross [if practised] external[ly] (bāhyā).¹⁸¹ At this level (atra) the repetition of the mantras is simply the cultivation of an ever more intense awareness of the ultimate reality. The mantra repeated accords [with this higher practice] (idrśah): it is the innate resonance [of that reality], the essence of [all] mantras (mantrātmā). As for visualization, this is no longer the process of imagining [the deity with] a body, eyes, faces, [so many] arms, and the like, but simply a motionless, form-free (nirākārā) and unsupported (nirāśrayā) awareness [of its real nature]. Worship (pūjā) likewise is not what is accomplished by [offering] flowers and the rest. It is awareness made firm, dissolution into that final void [within consciousness] which is free of all thought (nirvikalpe pare vyomni), through intense conviction [that this is the goal] (ādarāt)."

(179) This is the gist of the next verse, VijñBh 17: evamvidhā bhairavaśya yāvasthā pariṣṭyate / sā parā pararūpeṇa parādevī prakīrtitā //

(180) VijñBh 142c-47: (śrīdevy uvāca /) idam yadi vapur deva parāyāś ca maheśvara // 142 // evamuktavyavasthāyām japyate ko japaś ca kaḥ / dhyāyate ko mahānātha pūjyate kaś ca tṛpyati // 143 // hūyate kasya vā homo yāgaḥ kasya ca kiṃ katham / (śrībhairava uvāca /) eṣātra prakriyā bāhyā sthūlety eva mṛgeṣaṇe // 144 // bhūyo bhūyaḥ pare bhāve bhāvanā bhūyate hi yā / japaḥ so 'ra svayaṃ nādo mantrātmā japyā idrśah // 145 // dhyānaṃ hi niścalā buddhir nirākārā nirāśrayā / na tu dhyānaṃ śarīrākṣimukhaḥastaprakalpanā // 146 // pūjā nāma na puṣpādyair yā matiḥ kriyate dr̥ḍhā / nirvikalpe pare vyomni sā pūjā hy ādarāt layah // 147 //

(181) I have followed the reading sthūlety eva given by Bhaṭṭa (/ Bhaṭṭāraka) Ānanda (VijñBhD 58^b) rather than the sthūleṣu eva of Śivopādhyāya (VijñBhViv 129¹²).

9.9. I have examined elsewhere how in the cults of the Trika, of Kubjikā, Tripurasundari, Svachchandaḥairava, and Netranātha (Amṛteśvara[/-bhairava]), Abhinavagupta, Kṣemarāja, and south Indian scholars under their influence, have read this 'true ritual' (akalpītarācādi) back on to the rituals themselves, so that they could show how this gross level of practice, which after all was crucial to the institutional identity and hierarchy of these traditions, could still be seen as an effective means of liberation (upāyaḥ) for those incapable of purely cognitive or immediate methods.¹⁸² This interpolation of non-dualistic meaning was far from complete. Not all the elements of Tantric ritual lent themselves equally to such semanticization. Nor, in fact, was completeness necessary. It was enough that a given order of worship (paddhatiḥ) should be overcoded in its general structure and principal particulars. What was not justified by being shown to signify the higher truths of the gnostic exegetes was not assumed to be meaningless. On the contrary, the text of ritual was treated as a mine of latent meaning always open to deeper and more thorough exegesis of this kind.

9.10.1. The decision to attribute meaning to one element and not to another is generally without particular significance. There are instances, however, in which absence of interpretation may be seen as expression of an exegete's doctrinal orientation. Abhinavagupta's treatment of the visualizations of the Trika looks to be just such a case. He adheres to the view expressed in the passage of the Vijñānabhairava quoted above that the reality to be realized through the Trika transcends the particulars of the deities' mantras just as much as it transcends those of their icons. Yet it is only in the case of the former that he is concerned to read in appropriate meaning. We have seen that he demonstrates to his readers how sauḥ, though a mere mantra, can function through ritual as a means of liberation because it expresses or embodies that state of all-inclusive autonomy; and he provides similar keys to the mantras of Parāparā, Aparā, and the two alphabet-deities Śabdarāśi and Mālinī.¹⁸³ But the mental icons, and therefore the painted, cast or incised represen-

(182) See Sanderson 1990.

(183) See PTViv 226²⁶-227¹ (123¹⁴) on the mantra of Parāparā, referring to MālvijUT 4. 19-23; and PTViv 227¹⁵ (124¹⁰) on the mantra of Aparā, referring to MālvijUT 4. 24. These verses of the MālvijUT explain the correspondence between the constituents of the mantras and the levels of the cosmic order. For the same for Śabdarāśi (/Mātrkā) and Mālinī, the two alphabet-deities, see PTViv 219²⁷-259³⁰ (98^b-218^b), TĀ 3. 66-197^b (Śabdarāśi), and TĀV 9 (15) 68¹⁻¹⁵ (Mālinī). For an exhaustive treatment of the non-dualistic reading of the two alphabet-deities see Padoux (1963: 183-260).

tations of the deities based upon them, are left without any such justification. His lead was not followed by Kṣemarāja. For he, though adhering to Abhinavagupta's soteriology in all essentials, gives us elaborate and detailed metaphysical readings of the iconic attributes of Netranātha / Amṛteśvara and Svachchanda-bhairava in his surviving Tantric commentaries, those on the Netratāntra and the Svacchandatantra respectively. He also wrote the Bhairavā-nukarāṇastotra, a hymn to Svachchanda-bhairava, whose form is a meditation on the non-dualistic meaning of each feature of that deity's icon.¹⁸⁴

9.10.2. The key to this difference in exegetical policy lies in the fact that in Tantric ritual mantras are more real than visualized forms (dhyānāni). The identity of a Tantric deity rests principally in its mantra and only secondarily and dispensably in its icon. This principle is illustrated in Abhinavagupta's treatment of Netratāntra 18. 119c-121b. That passage permits the officiant (ācāryaḥ) to install on behalf of the deceased at the place of cremation an image of a deity proper to the esoteric Bhairavāgamic tradition, namely a variant of Koṭarākṣabhairava, one of the ectypes of Svachchanda-bhairava. Since the installation (pratiṣṭhā) of a deity is understood to mean the installation of the mantras of that deity in an appropriate material substrate, this permission might appear to contradict a fundamental rule of his system, namely that the mantras of the esoteric, non-Saiddhāntika traditions should never be established in idols within the public domain. He predicts this objection by ruling that the Netratāntra refers not to the deity Bhairava in its essential identity as embodied in its mantra, but only to the physical representation of the icon in an idol. The mantra which should be installed in a Bhairava idol of this public variety should come not from the Bhairava canon but should be one of the 'common' (sādhāraṇa-), exoteric mantras of the Siddhānta system such as the mantra of Netranātha himself.¹⁸⁵

9.10.3. Where the various Śaiva cults are ranked according to the degree to which their methods approach ultimate, non-sequential intuition, as is the case in the Trika of Abhinavagupta, the omission

(184) See NeTU 1 (3) 73¹⁰-74⁵; SvTU 1 (2) 53⁵-55¹⁰; BhairAnukSt throughout; and Sanderson 1990.

(185) For this issue of the cremation ground Bhairavas see TĀ 27. 7-8 and commentary. This topic and the identity of the common mantras is covered in my forthcoming 'Idols and Other Substrates of Worship in the Trika.'

or suppression of the dhyānas of the deities of a cult will therefore signify that it is superior to the mainstream of Tantric worship. The outstanding scriptural example of such a cult — and we know that it exerted a strong influence on Abhinavagupta's exegesis — is the Krama, the cult of Kālī which is taught in the Devipañcaśataka (/Kālikulapañcaśataka), the Kramasadbhāva (/Kālikulakramasadbhāva) and other such āgamas.¹⁸⁶ There are also the related and equally aniconic cults of the esoteric goddesses Prajñākālī, Kuṇḍaleśvarī and Saptakoṭīśvarī taught in the Jayadrathayāmala.¹⁸⁷ Abhinavagupta has elevated the cult of the Parātrimśikā on to the same level by eliminating that text's brief but unambiguous reference to concrete visualization; and he has done what he could in this direction for the cult of the Mālinīvijayottara.

9.10.4. However not all Trika ritual was required by Abhinavagupta to transcend the common form of Tantric worship. For in his longer commentary on the Parātrimśikā he says that those who desire to realize the Trika but are unable to establish themselves in such a subtle practice

... should resort to the ritual taught in the Siddhātāntra (/Siddhayogeśvarīmata) or some other [more exoteric āgama of the Trika] which describes the deities' visualizations and other such [conventional.] contracted methods.¹⁸⁸

Since it is clear that he refers here to worship practised by liberationists it follows that he recognizes or rather advocates three levels of ritual practice within the stream of the Trika with which he is concerned: (i) that of the Siddhayogeśvarīmata, whose Tantric rites are parallel to those of such 'lower' systems as the cults of

(186) The present author is preparing critical editions of these unpublished works.

(187) See JayadYāmT 2, paṭala 22 (prajñākālīvidhānam), folios 100r 9-102v 3; ibid. 3, kuṇḍaleśvarīvidhipaṭalaḥ, folios 107v 1-118v 5; ibid. 4, prayogamañjarīkuhādividhipaṭalasaptakoṭīśvarīprakaraṇam, folios 178v 5-179v 5. I have not been able to decode the mantra of Prajñākālī. [That of] Kuṇḍaleśvarī is the syllable hskhphrem; ant [that of] Saptakoṭīśvarī is the seven syllabled mantra kaḥ saḥ caṇḍini saḥ kaḥ. The mantras are taught in code ('raised') at JayadYāmT 3, folio 108r2-5 and ibid. 4, folio 178v6-7. For Saptakoṭīśvarī in the Krama (/Uttarāmnāya) see UttCaru folio 7r 1-3 and MahārthMP 187². She is included among the goddess-mantras that receive oblations in the fire-sacrifice of the Kashmirian AgnikPaddh; see folio 75r 1-10, where she does have a visualization text but one in which she is contemplated without specific form, an avyaktaṃ dhyānam: ekāṅkāṅkāmudrā kavalanāniratā saptamuṇḍāsanasthā prodbhūtādhāracakrāt pralayaśikhiśikhā saptadhā prasphuranti / nād(c)ādyantāntarāle dhvaninidhanamahāvuyomavāmeśvarī yā sā devī ghoracandā paharatu duritam saptakoṭīśvarī nah //.

(188) PTViv 278¹⁰⁻¹³ (265¹⁵-266⁴): (āruṇakṣur etāvattirikāṛthābhilāṣukaś ca katham ārohatu iti cet kasyāyam arthibhāvaḥ / mā tarhy āruṇakṣat /) siddhātāntrādividhim eva tadāśayenaiva nīrūpitātaddhyānādīsaṃkocam ālambatām /.

Svacchandabhairava, Netranātha and the Saiddhāntika Sadāśiva, in which the deity of regular and incidental ritual is worshipped with a common, all-purpose icon; (ii) that of the Mālinīvijayottara, in which this pattern is broken, most but not all visualization being referred to the practice of the non-liberationists; and finally (iii) that of the Parātrīṣikā, in which the worship of the liberationist is fully aniconic, resting entirely on the mantra and subjective contemplation.

10. THEORY AND PRACTICE

10.0. It is this last system, known variously as the Anuttara, Ekavīra or Parākrama, which appears to have been the most enduring and influential. Madhurāja, south Indian ascetic from the great Śaiva centre of Madurai and pupil of Abhinavagupta,¹⁸⁹ speaks of himself as having attained enlightenment (literally 'having mastered the universe') by its power,¹⁹⁰ and is careful to distinguish it from the Trika when praising his master as the highest authority on all branches of the Śaiva revelation.¹⁹¹ His pupil Varadarāja/Kṛṣṇadāsa speaks of Madhurāja in similar terms as 'having attained sudden penetration into the totality of the thirty-six tattvas through the Parākrama'.¹⁹² He was himself, perhaps, the author of the Parātrīṣikātātparyadīpikā, composed in the southern temple-city of Cidambaram,¹⁹³ which expounds in verse Abhinavagupta's laghuvṛtti on the Parātrīṣikā, the root text of this tradition.¹⁹⁴ Other works from south India in this system are the Parāpañcāśikā alias Anutataraprakāśapañcāśikā of Ādyanātha¹⁹⁵ and the Parākrama, a text

(189) See GuruP 41 (mādhurah); 40, 43, 44, 46 and colophon (madhurājah); 19, 20 (namo bhinavaguptagurūttamāya); 32 (na madgurvadhikah kaścid); 33 (maddaiśikah).

(190) GuruP 40: parākramākrāntaviśvādīkacre ... madhurāje mayi ...

(191) GuruP18: siddhāntavāmbhairavayāmalakaulatrikaikaviravidām / abhinavaguptah śrīmān ācāryapade sthito jayati // 'The glorious Abhinavagupta reigns victorious, for he is the ultimate human authority (ācāryah) for all who know the Siddhānta, the Vāma, the Bhairava, the Yāmala, the Kaula, the Trika or the Ekavīra.' The use of the term Ekavīra for this system is also seen in Kṣemarāja's gloss on NeT 13. 39c (yāmale caikavīre ca): ekavīra iti parātrīṣikāmatatrimśikāda (NeTU 1 [13] 274¹⁸).

(192) ŚivSūVart 212-214b: akhaṇḍasamvitsāmrājyayauvarājyādihikāriṇām / parākramahaṭhākraṇṭaṣaṭtriṃśatattvasampadām // madhurājakumārāṇām mahāhantādhirohiṇām / paścimena tadālokadhvastapaścimajanmanā // mayā varadarājena...

(193) See above p. 00, nn. 9 and 10.

(194) The PTTātD is anonymous in its edition; but there are MSS of a Parātrīṣikā-laghuvṛttivimarśinī by Kṛṣṇadāsa in Kerala which may well be the same work (Trivandrum Univ. MSS Library Cat. 537 - 8[MSS 5854F and C.2108D]).

(195) See PPañcās 50cd: parākramaparo bhuṅkte svabhāvam aśivāpaham /. Note also the reference to hrdayam (= sauha) as the essence of Mātṛkā (a - kṣa) at 41.

of unknown authorship surviving in quotations in Amṛtānandanātha's commentary on the Yoginīhrdaya.¹⁹⁶ We have already seen what is perhaps the most striking evidence of the prevalence of this cult among the Śaivas of south India during the second millennium: its incorporation into the system of goddess-worship which centres on Lalitā and is recorded in the Paraśurāmakalpasastra. Extremely learned practical commentaries on this text survive to testify to its enduring status: the Nityotsava composed in AD 1745 by Umānandanātha (Jagannāthapaṇḍita), a Maharashtrian devotee of Lalitā who was honoured, he tells us, by the Bhosle of Cola, that is, by the ruler at the Marāṭha court of Tanjore;¹⁹⁷ and the Saubhāgyodaya composed in AD 1831 by Aparājītānandanātha (Rāmeśvara), another Maharashtrian.¹⁹⁸ A commentary, now lost, was also composed by the great Bhāsurānandanātha (Bhāskaraṛāya Makhin) of Banaras, who initiated Umānandanātha on the banks of the Kāverī during a visit to the south.¹⁹⁹ A. Mahadeva Sastri, the editor of these two (196) YogHrD 276²³ (see above, p. 00, n. 0); 286²⁷; 294⁹⁻¹³.

(197) See Nityots 224¹⁻¹²: śrutapeṭavopanāmnā colādhīpabhosalendumānyena / nāṭakakāvyaśikṛtā mahitamahārāṣṭrajātihiṇena // trayantatattvaśīlanadalitajaga - chāttra - jālamohena / bhāratyupākyabhāskaramakhidesīkalabdhadaikṣanāmnāyam // āmnāyatantrajālālokapareṇāryasampradāyajuṣā lalitāpadābjarolambena jagannāthapaṇḍitena / kalyabdeṣu rasānavakarivedamiteṣu iha vyatīteṣu / navyaḥ krodhanaśaradī nyabandhi nityotsavah śivapṛītyai / 'I the most learned Jagannātha, surnamed Śrutapeṭava, honoured by the Bhosle of Cola, author of dramas and *kāvya*s, bringer of glory to the line of the caste of the Maharashtrian [Deśastha brahmins], who by the study of the Upaniṣads have broken through the ignorance [which is the basis of] the world ..., who received my initiation-name [Umānandanātha] from the teacher Bhāskara Makhin titled -bhārati, who am devoted to the study of the Vedas and the Tantras, a recipient of the venerable tradition, a bee [drawn] to the lotuses which are the feet of the goddess Lalitā, have composed [this] new Nityotsava for the pleasure of Śiva in the autumn of the fifty-ninth year of the Jovian cycle, 4846 years of the Kali age having passed.' The editor (ParaśurKS Pt. 1, xi) reads this as 4876 (AD 1775) by interpreting -arṇava - 'oceans' as 7 rather than as 4. But this is an error, as can be seen from the same author's dating of his HrDA (91¹⁸⁻¹⁹): kalyabdeṣu gateṣu agni[3]-śruti[4]-nāgā[8]-bdhi-[4]samkhyayā, 'Kali Era 4843 [AD 1742].' See also HrDA viii on the dates of his various works.

(198) ParaśurKSSaubhBhāsk 336¹⁵-337³ gives the author's initiation name (Aparājītānandanātha) and the date of composition (agnibāṇādrībhusaṅkhye śāke tapasi gṛspateḥ / vāsare śuklapakṣasya dina ādye niśāmukhe) //, 'At the beginning of the night on Thursday, the first day of the bright fortnight of the month Phālguna, Śaka 1753'. His secular name is given in the colophons. That he too was a Maharashtrian brahmin is evident from the fact that he gives Marāṭhī glosses on certain obscure terms (see, e.g., 114^{2, 3, 4b}), refers to differences in the rites of passage observed by Maharashtrians, Drāviḍas and Āndhras (11⁸⁻¹⁰), and quotes the Hiranyakeśigṛhyasūtra and a commentary thereon (92⁴; 18¹). This Gṛhyasūtra is that of the Koṅkanastha (Citpāvana) brahmins of Mahārāṣṭra (see Gazetteer of the Bombay Presidency, Vol. XVII, Pt 1 [Poona], Bombay, 1885).

(199) The existence of this commentary, called -ratnāloka, is testified by Umānandanātha / Jagannātha in his Bhaktiulāsakāvya; see Pandey 1963, 588-589. It is also referred to by Umānandanātha at Nityots 2¹⁴: tat sarvaṃ śrīguruprokte ratnāloke 'dhigamyatām. For the initiation of Umānandanātha see Nityots 1¹⁸. Bhāskaraṛāya too was Maharashtrian, as can be seen from the names of his paternal grandfather and great-grandfather: Tukadeva and Ekanātha; see Pandey 1963, 585.

texts, refers to the commentary of yet another Maharashtrian, Lakṣmaṇa Rāṇaḍe, composed in AD 1883. Finally, there is the Mahātripurasundarīvarivasyā compiled from these earlier works by the late Karapātrasvāmī and edited by his pupil Paṭṭābhiraṃa Śāstri (AD 1962).

10.1. This south Indian tradition is fully aware of its debt to Abhinavagupta and the other Kashmirian authorities of the ninth and tenth centuries. Their works were held in the highest esteem and continued to provide the theoretical basis of an āgamic, non-Upanishadic non-dualism among the devotees of the Goddess at least into the nineteenth century.²⁰⁰ Since their system incorporates the Anuttara cult and considers Parā to be the inner nature of Lalitā herself, we might assume that they would have inherited Abhinavagupta's position on this cult, namely that the worship of Parā should be aniconic. But it has not. It is precisely the south Indian sources on the Anuttara cult that have provided our best evidence for Parā's visualization. The Parātrimśikātātparyadīpikā itself contains this icon, though in general it is a faithful exposition of Abhinavagupta's shorter commentary on the seminal scripture of this tradition. It might appear, then, that this was one matter on which the prescription of the Kashmirian tradition was not considered binding. However it would be more accurate to say that Abhinavagupta's icon-less Anuttara cult never was and never could be a reality in action. His exegesis of the Parātrimśikā is an exercise in translating ritual into pure thought, and ultimately into a metaphorical description of an absolute reality that cannot descend without distortion even into the sequence of ratiocination. The purpose of such writing was no doubt to prescribe an attitude of transcendence to be cultivated while performing rituals, an attitude which could justify ritual activity for Śaivas who were being asked to accept a non-dualistic metaphysics which would seem to make it redundant.²⁰¹ It could also justify the existence of Śaivas who performed no rituals in the true sense: their purely conceptual or yogic religion could thus be shown to be a kind of ritual after all, and therefore

(200) The Tripurārahasyaājñānakhaṇḍatātparyadīpikā is an outstanding example of this. Composed in AD 1832 by Śrinivāsaḥṭṭa, an inhabitant of Mahāpuṣkara, one of the five grāmas of Madurai (TripRahTātDip 452³¹²), it follows the [Kashmirian] Śivādvaita of the text (itself composed in Tamilnadu), supports it with quotations from the works of Vasugupta, Somānanda, Utpaladeva, Abhinavagupta and Kṣemarāja, and has a keen sense of the opposition between its own āgamic doctrine and that of the Aupaniṣadas (the Advaitavedānta of the Śaṅkarācāryas).

(201) See Sanderson 1990.

to be less unorthodox than it might otherwise seem. What it did not do was to change the ritual itself for those who performed it. Whatever they might think while performing it, or whatever they might aspire to through assimilating the works of Abhinavagupta and the other advanced literature of the tradition, they continued to visualize Parā as they would any other Tantric deity.

ABBREVIATIONS IN THE NOTES

BN = Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. Bod. = Bodleian Library, Oxford. GOS = Gaekwad's Oriental Series. KSTS = Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies. MP = Mantrapāda. NAK = National Archives, Kathmandu. PIFI = Publications de l'Institut Français d'Indologie. STK 7 = Photographically reproduced by Lokesh Chandra in Sanskrit Texts from Kashmir, Volume 7 (Śaṭapīṭaka Series No. 333), New Delhi, 1984. TT = Tantrik Texts.

Primary Sources

AgnikPaddh	Agnikāryapaddhati . BN, MS Sanscrit 166A.
AgnikPaddh ²	Agnikāryapaddhati . Bod., MS Chandra Shum Shere f. 110.
AgnP	Agnipurāṇa . Ed. Baladeva Upādhyāya. Kashi Sanskrit Series 174. Varanasi. 1966.
AmbSt	Ambāstava . See PañcSt.
AhīrBSam	Ahīrbudhnyasamhitā . Ed. Pandit M.D. Ramanujacharya, rev. Pandit V. Krishnamacharya. Adyar Library Series. Volume 4.2 Parts. Madras. 1966 (2nd ed.).
ĀgRah	Āgamarahasya [uttarārḍha] by Sarayūprasād Dviveda. Ed. Gaṅgādhara Dviveda. Rājasthāna Purātana Granthamālā 110. Jodhpur. 1969.
ĪśānSGDPaddh	Īśānaśivagurudevapaddhati [Siddhāntasāra] . Ed. T. Gaṇapati Sastri. Trivandrum Sanskrit Series 69, 72, 77, 83. Trivandrum. 1920-25.
ĪśvPratVim	Īśvarapratyabhijñāvivimarśini by Abhinavagupta. Ed. Mukund Ram (Vol. 1) and Madhusudan Kaul (Vol. 2). KSTS 22, 33. Bombay. 1918, 1921.
ĪśvPratVivVim	Īśvarapratyabhijñāvivimarśini by Abhinavagupta. Ed. Madhusudan Kaul. KSTS 60, 72, 75. Bombay. 1938-43.
UttCaru	Uttaracaruvīdhāna . NAK MS 1/1559.
UttĀmnPavĀrohV	Uttarāmnāyapavitrārohanavidhi . NAK MAS 1/70.
KarmK	Karmakāṇḍa Volume 4. Ed. Paṇḍita Keśavaḥṭṭa Jyotirvid [= Keshav Bhat Zutish]. Bombay. 1936. [STK 7].
KāśmDTīrthSam	Kāśmīradeśatīrthasaṃgraha (Skt.) by Pt. Sāhib Rām. Bod., MS Stein. or. d. 2.
KālikulaKA	Kālikulakramārcana by Vimalaprabodha. NAK MS 5 / 5188.
KāśmKarmKPaddh	[Kāśmīrikakarmakāṇḍapaddhati]. Bod., MS Sansk. d. 335 ('Awaiting description'). [Folios 295r13-296r19: Ekāntavāsiniḍevatāyāgaḥ].
KubjM	Kubjikāmatatantra: Kulālikāmnāya Version . Ed. T. Goudriaan and J.A. Schoterman. Leiden. 1988.
KulRatnU	Kularatnoddhota . Bod., MS Chandra Shum Shere c. 348.

KulārṇT	Kulārṇavatāntra . Ed. Tārānātha Vidyārātṇa. TT 5. London. 1917.
KaulāvN	Kaulāvalinirṇaya by Jñānānandagiri. Ed. A. Avalon. TT 14. Calcutta. Samvat 1985 [AD 1928/9].
GuhyKāPūV	Guhyakālīpūjāvidhi . NAK MS 1 / 1696 / 239.
GuruP	Gurūnāthaparāmarśa by Madhurāja. Ed. P.N. Pushp. KSTS 85. Srinagar. 1960.
JayadYāmT	Jayadrathayāmālatāntra . NAK MS 5/4650 (śaṭka 1 and 2); NAK MS 5 / 1976 (śaṭka 3); NAK MS 1 / 1468 (śaṭka 4).
JayadYāmMUddh	Jayadrathayāmālamantrodhāraṭippaṇī (anonymous). NAK MS 1 / 1514.
JñānārṇT	Jñānārṇavatāntra . Ed. Gapeśa Śāstrī Gokhale. Ānandāśrama Sanskrit Texts Series 69. Pune. 1952 (2nd ed.).
TanSadbh	Tantrasadbhāva . NAK MS 1 / 363.
TSāra	Tantrasāra by Abhinavagupta. Ed. Mukund Ram Sastri. KSTS 17. Bombay. 1918.
TĀ, -V	Tantrāloka by Abhinavagupta, with the commentary (-vivēka) of Jayaratha. Ed. Mukund Ram Sastri. KSTS 23, 28, 30, 35, 29, 41, 47, 59, 52, 57, 58. Bombay - Srinagar. 1918-38.
TantrColl	Tantric Collectanea . Bod., MS Chandra Shum Shere e. 264.
TantrDigUnkN	A Tantric Digest of Unknown Name . Asiatic Society of Bengal. MS 11354.
TridaśaḍāmPraty-VNT	Tridaśaḍāmarapratyaṅgiraviśayakanānātāntra . NAK MS 3 / 30.
TripRahTātD	Tripurārahasya (Jñānakhaṇḍa) , with the commentary (-tātparyadīpikā) by Śrīnivāsabhāṭṭa. Ed. Gopinath Kaviraj. Sarasvatī Bhavana Granthamālā 15. Varanasi. 1965.
DevidvyŚ	Devidyārḍhaśatikā . NAK MS 1 / 242.
DevidhyRatnM	Devidhyānaratnamālāstutiḥ [Durgapūjāyām] . In Ganeśa-Durgāstotrāvalī . Ed. Paṇḍita Keśavabhāṭṭa Jyotirvid [= Keshav Bhat Zutish], Bombay, 1935, pp. 63-79 ¹⁵ .
DevipañcŚ	Devipañcaśataka . NAK MS 1 / 252 folios 1 - 31 [= Kālikulapañcaśataka]. The MS is wrongly catalogued as Kālikākulakramārcana .
Devīrah	Devīrahasya with Pariśiṣṭas . Ed. Ram Chandra Kak and Harabhaṭṭa Shastri. KSTS. Srinagar. 1941. Reprinted Delhi: Butala. Publications. 1985.
DhKoś 3, III	Dharmakośa. Saṃskarakāṇḍa . Volume III, Part III. Ed. Laxmanshastri Joshi. Satara. 1981.
Nityāṣod, - ARĀ	Nityāṣoḍaśīkārṇava , with the commentaries of Śivānanda (-rjuvimarśinī) and Vidyānanda (-artharatnāvalī). Ed. V.V. Dvivedi. Yogatantragranthamālā 1. Varanasi: Sanskrit University. 1968.
NityāhnTil	[Kubjikā]- Nityāhnikatilaka by Muktaka. NAK MS 3 / 384.
Nityots	Nityotsava by Jagannāthapaṇḍita (Umānandanātha) [commentary on the Paraśurāmakaḥpasūtra]. GOS 23 [Published as Paraśurāmakaḥpasūtra Part 2]. Baroda. 1923.
NeT, -U	Netratāntra , with the commentary (-uddyoṭa) of Kṣemarāja. Ed. Madhusudan Kaul. KSTS 46, 61. Bombay. 1926, 1939.
PañcSt	Pañcastavi [Laghustava, Carcāstava, Ghaṭastava, Ambāstava, Sakalajanānistava] . Ed. Durgāprasāda and Kāśinātha Pāṇḍuraṅga Paraba. Kāvyaṃālā Pt. III. Bombay. 1887.

ParamSāra	Paramārthasāra by Abhinavagupta, with the commentary (-vīrti) of Yogarāja. Ed. J.C. Chatterji. KSTS 7. Srinagar. 1916.
ParaśurKS, -SaubhBh	Paraśurāmakaḥpasūtra , with the commentary (-saubhāgya-bhāṣaka) of Rāmeśvara (Aparājītanandanātha). Ed. A. Mahadeva Sastri. GOS 22. Baroda. 1923.
PT, -LaghVr	Parātrīṃśikā , with the [shorter] commentary -laghuvrtti , also called Anuttaravimarśinī of Abhinavagupta. Ed. Jagaddhara Zadoo. KSTS 68. Srinagar. 1947.
PT, -Viv	Raniero Gnoli, Il Commento di Abhinavagupta alla Parātrīṃśikā (Parātrīṃśikāvivarāṇam) . Traduzione e Testo. Serie Orientale Roma LVIII. Roma: IIMEO. 1985. References are to this edition, followed in parentheses by references to the edition of Mukund Ram Sastri (KSTS 18. Bombay. 1918).
PTTātD	Parātrīṃśikātātparyadīpikā (anonymous commentary on the Parātrīṃśikālaghuvrtti of Abhinavagupta). Ed. Jagaddhara Zadoo Shastri KSTS 74. Srinagar. 1947.
PPañcāś	Parāpañcāśikā [Anuttaraprakāśapañcāśikā] by Ādyanātha. Ed. V.V. Dvivedi as an appendix in YogHrD (395-400).
PiṅgM	Piṅgalāmata . NAK MS 3 / 376.
PicM-BY	Picumata-Brahmayāmala . NAK MS 3 / 370.
PuraścArṇ	Puraścaryārṇava by King Pratāpasimhadeva Shah of Nepal [ruled AD 1775 - 1777]. Ed. Muralidhar Jha. Vrajajivan Prachyabharati Granthamala 10. Delhi: Chowkhamba. 1980. Reprint.
PrapañcS, -V, -PKD	Prapañcasāratāntra by Śaṅkarācārya, with commentary (-vrtti) by Padmapādācārya, and subcommentary (-prayogakramadīpikā) by an unknown author. Ed. Atālananda Sarasvatī. TT 19. Calcutta. 1935. Reprint Delhi: Motilal Banarsidass. 1981.
BodhPañc	Bodhapañcadaśikā by Abhinavagupta, with the commentary (-vivarāṇa) of Harabhaṭṭa Shastri. Ed. Jagaddhara Zadoo Shastri. KSTS 76. Srinagar. 1947.
BrahmāP	Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa . Veṅkaṭeśvara Steam Press. Bombay. Samvat 1992 [AD 1935/6].
BhairAnukSt	Bhairavānukaraṇastotra by Kṣemarāja. Ed. Raneiro Gnoli. 'Miscellanea Indica', East and West, New Series, Volume 9, No. 3, September 1958, 223-226.
MahātripV	Mahātripurasundarīvarīvyā [compiled] by Karapātra Svāmī. Ed. Paṭṭābhīrāma Śāstrī. Calcutta. 1962.
MahārthM, -P	Mahārthamañjarī by Maheśvarānanda, with auto-commentary (-parimala). Ed. V.V. Dvivedi. Varanasi: Sanskrit University. 1972.
MālVijUT	Mālinīvijayottaratāntra . Ed. Madhusudan Kaul. KSTS 37. Srinagar. 1922.
Mrg	Mrgendragama [Kriyāpāda (KP) and Caryāpāda (CP)] , with the commentary (-vrtti) of Nārāyaṇakaṇṭha. Ed. N.R. Bhatt. PIFI 23. Pondicherry. 1962.
YogHr, -D	Yoginihṛdaya , with the commentary (-dīpikā) of Amṛtānandanātha. Ed. V.V. Dvivedi. Delhi. 1988.
RahPañc	Rahasyapañcadaśikā , attributed to Abhinavagupta. Ed. K.C. Pandey (1963: 954-56).

- LaghSt
Lalitop
VijñBh, -V
VijñBh, -D
VivV
ViṣṇDhUP
VedKalpD
ŚambhNirṇ
ŚārTil, -PĀ
ŚivSūVart
ŚivSūVim
ŚVidyārṇT
ŚaṭsāhTipp
SomŚPaddh 3
SaundLah
SaundLahL
SvT, -U
HrdA
- Laghustava*. See PañcSt.
Lalitopākhyāna. Part of BrahmāP (uttarabhāga, upasamhārapāda, adhyāyas 5-44 [pp. 254b-339b]).
Vijñānabhairavatantra, with the commentary (-uddiyota) of Kṣemarāja surviving on verses 1 to 23, and that (-vūrti) of Śivopādhyāya on the rest. Ed. Mukund Ram Sastri. KSTS 8. Bombay. 1918.
Vijñānabhairavatantra, with the commentary (-dīpikā [also called Vijñānakaumudī]) of Bhaṭṭa (/ Bhaṭṭāraka) Ānanda. Ed. Mukund Ram Sastri. KSTS 9 [bound with VijñBh, -V]. Bombay. 1918.
Vivāhavidhi. Ed. Paṇḍita Nātharāma Śāstrin. Srinagar. Vikrama Samvat 1996 [= AD 1939/40]. [STK 7].
Viṣṇudharmottarapurāṇa, khaṇḍa 3. Ed. Priyabala Shah. GOS 130. Baroda. 1958.
Vedakalpadruma. [Kāśmīriyatraivarnyopayogī laugākṣimuni prakṛptaḥ]. Ed. Paṇḍita Keśavabhaṭṭa Jyotirvid [= Keshav Bhat Zutish]. Bombay. Saptarṣi Samvat 4997 [= AD 1921 / 22]. [STK 7].
Śambhunirṇaya, with the commentary (-dīpikā) of Śivānanda [author of Nityāśoḍaśikāṇava-rjuvimarśinī]. Madras Govt. Oriental Manuscript Library MS 14695 (R No. 3203 c.d) Śāradātilaka by Lakṣmaṇadeśika, with commentary (-padārthādarśa) by Rāghavabhaṭṭa. Ed. A. Avalon. TT 17. Calcutta. 1933.
Śivasūtravārtika by Varadarāja [alias Kṛṣṇadāsa]. KSTS 43. Srinagar. 1925.
Śivasūtravimarśinī by Kṣemarāja. Ed. J.C. Chatterji. KSTS 1. Srinagar. 1911.
Śrividyaṛṇavatantra [Pt. 1] by Vidyāraṇyayati. Ed. Bhadrāśīla Śarma. Prayāg: Kalyāṇ Mandir. Samvat 2023 [AD 1977].
Śaṭsāhasaṭippaṇa (anonymous) [a commentary on the Kulālikāmnāya version of the Kubjikāmata]. NAK MS 1/30 [Catalogued as Kulālikāmnāya].
Somaśambhupaddhati [Kriyākāṇḍakramāvalī by Somaśambhu] Pt. 3. Ed., transl., annot. Hélène Brunner-Lachaux. PIFI No. 25 III. Pondichéry. 1977.
Saundaryalaharī of Śaṅkarācārya. Ed. W. Norman Brown. Harvard Oriental Series 43. Cambridge. 1958.
Saundaryalaharī of Śaṅkarācārya, with the commentaries of Kaivalyāśrama (-saubhāgyavardhanī), Lakṣmidhara (-lakṣmidharī [L]) and Kāmeśvarasūri (-aruṇāmodinī). Ed. & transl. R. Anantakṛṣṇa Śāstri and Śrī Karrā Rāmamūṛthy Gāru. Madras: Ganesh & Co. 1957.
Svacchandatantra, with the commentary (-uddiyota) of Kṣemarāja. Ed. Madhusudan Kaul. KSTS 31, 38, 44, 48, 51, 53, 56. Bombay. 1921-35.
Hrdayāmṛta by Jagannāthapaṇḍita [author of Nityots] Ed. H.V. Nagaraja Rao. Oriental Research Institute Series 134. Mysore: Oriental Research Institute. 1980.

Secondary sources

- Chhabra, B.C.
1966
CNRS.
1986
Gnoli, Raniero.
1972.
Goudriaan, T. and Schoterman, J.A.
1988.
Grierson, Sir G.A. [assisted by Mukundarāma Śāstrī]
1915, 32.
Kulke, Hermann.
1970.
Macdonald, A.W. and Vergati Stahl, Anne.
1979.
de Mallmann, Marie-Thérèse.
1963
Mitchell, G., Lampert C., and Holland T.
1982.
Padoux, André
1963
Pal, Pratapaditya.
1975
Pandey, Kanti Candra.
1963.
Rawson, Philip.
1973.
1978.
Sanderson, Alexis.
1986.
1988.
- "Svachchhanda Bhairavī Bronze Image from Kangra," Journal of Indian History, XLII, 1, pp. 145-148.
Mantras et Diagrammes Rituels dans l'Hindouisme [Table Ronde. Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique. Équipe n° 249 "L'hindouisme: texte, doctrines, pratiques."]. Paris: Éditions du CNRS.
Luce della Sacre Scritture (Tantrāloka) di Abhinavagupta (traduzione). Torino: Unione Tipografico-Editrice Torinese.
The Kubjikāmata: Kulālikāmnāya Version. Leiden etc.: Brill.
A Dictionary of the Kāśmīrī Language. Calcutta: Asiatic Soc. of Bengal. 2 Parts.
Cidambaramāhātmya. Eine Untersuchungen der religionsgeschichtlichen und historischen Hintergründe für die Entzuehlung einer süd-indischen Templestadt. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz.
Newar Art; Nepalese Art during the Malla Period. Warminster: Aris & Phillips.
Les Enseignements Iconographiques de l'Agnipurāṇa. Paris: Presses Universitaires de France.
In the Image of Man. Hayward Gallery, London 25 March-13 June 1982. London: Weidenfeld and Nicholson.
Recherches sur la Symbolique et l'Énergie de la Parole dans certain Textes Tantriques. Paris: Boccard.
Bronzes of Kashmir. Graz: Akademische Druck - u. Verlagsanstalt.
Abhinavagupta. An Historical and Philosophical Study. 2nd ed. Varanasi: Chowkhamba.
Tantra. London: Thames and Hudson.
The Art of Tantra. London.
'Maṇḍala and Āgamic Identity in the Trika of Kashmir' in CNRS 1986, 169-214.
'Śaivism and the Tantric Traditions' in Stewart Sutherland et al. eds., The World's Religions, London: Routledge, 660-704.

1990. 'Meaning in Tantric Ritual' in Anne-Marie Blondeau and Kristofer Schipper eds., Essais sur le Rituel III. [Colloque du Centenaire de la section des Sciences Religieuses de l'École Pratique des Hautes Études]. Louvain-Paris: Peeters. Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, Vol. XCII. (Forthcoming).
- Schoterman, J. A.
1982. The Śaṣāhasra Saṃhitā, Chapters 1-5. Edited, translated and annotated. Leiden: Brill.
- Schrader, F. Otto.
1916. Introduction to the Pañcarātra and the Ahirbudhnyasaṃhitā. Madras: Adyar Library.
- Sharma, B.N.
1971. "Consort of Sadāśiva," Oriental Art, XVII, 4, pp. 354-356.
- Stein, M.A.
1900. Kaḥaṇa's Rājatarāṅgī. A Chronicle of the Kings of Kashmir. Translated with an introduction, commentary & appendices. 2 Volumes. London.

IMAGE MENTALE, MÉDITATION ET CULTE DANS LA ŚRĪVIDYĀ (Quelques exemples tirés du Yoginīhṛdaya)*

PAR
ANDRÉ PADOUX

La tradition de la Śrīvidyā, où se pratique le culte des Yoginī, se rattache par là à une ancienne tradition śivaïte, née dans ce qu'on nomme parfois la « voie des mantras » (mantramarga), où les divers plans du cosmos ont pour régents des divinités féminines, les Yoginī. Elle apparaît comme une des branches de l'ensemble du Kula, dont elle aurait formé — au moins à ses débuts — la « transmission méridionale » (dakṣiṇāmnāya)¹. La divinité principale y est Tripurasundarī, « La Belle des Trois mondes », parfois nommée Kāmeśvarī (elle est alors associée à Kāmeśvara, dieu de l'amour ou plutôt de la jouissance érotique). Son culte, ses rites, avec les spéculations qui les entourent, ont, de fait, une tonalité plutôt érotique, ou en tout cas aimable et ils sont en cela assez différents des cultes de Kālī ou d'autres divinités terribles du tantrisme.

Mais ce qui caractérise surtout la Śrīvidyā, c'est que la Déesse y a pour mūlamantra la *śrīvidyā*² et qu'elle est adorée au moyen d'un diagramme, le śrīcakra, qui est à la fois sa forme diagrammatique et l'aire sur laquelle se fait son culte : Tripurasundarī siège au milieu (*) Je développe ici un peu une brève intervention faite au cours de la discussion qui avait suivi l'exposé de François Chenet, qu'on lira plus loin.

(1) Sur l'évolution probable des sectes ou traditions śivaïtes au cours des âges, on se reportera à l'étude d'Alexis Sanderson, « Śaivism and the Tantric Tradition », parue dans Sutherland et al., eds. The World's Religions (London : Routledge, 1988, pp. 660-704).

(2) Mantra formé de trois groupes de bīja ayant ensemble le plus souvent quinze ou seize syllabes.

CENTRE NATIONAL DE LA RECHERCHE SCIENTIFIQUE

UPR 249 « L'hindouisme, textes, doctrines, pratiques »

L'IMAGE DIVINE

CULTE ET MÉDITATION DANS L'HINDOUIISME

Études rassemblées par

André Padoux

Directeur de recherche au CNRS

ÉDITIONS DU CENTRE NATIONAL
DE LA RECHERCHE SCIENTIFIQUE
15, Quai Anatole France — 75700 PARIS

—
1990