Preface

The manuscripts known as the Books of Chilam Balam are rich sources of information on the colonial language, culture, and history of the Yucatecan Maya. They also represent the continuation of a scribal tradition with roots extending back into the third century A.D. For most purposes, all that is required is a transcription and translation of these manuscripts. But for linguistic and epigraphic research, a morpheme concordance of the texts is indispensable.

In 1982, I was awarded a fellowship by the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation in support of research on the grammar of the Mayan hieroglyphs (Bricker 1986). As my investigation progressed, I realized that I needed to have some understanding of the text frequency of grammatical morphemes in a relevant colonial Mayan language. The Books of Chilam Balam of Tizimin and Chumayel were obvious candidates for this purpose. They were both historical manuscripts, and facsimile copies of them were available to me at Tulane University. Furthermore, my colleague, Munro S. Edmonson, had by then completed new, poetic translations of both Books, and I could consult them (and him) when deciding where words should be segmented into morphemes (Edmonson 1982, 1986). Finally, another colleague, William M. Ringle, had already written the necessary programs to create concordances with a computer; it was convenient for me to prepare the relevant texts on an Apple II Plus computer at home and transmit them by telephone to the DEC 2060 mainframe computer at Tulane, where Ringle compiled the concordances.

Anne Yeoman, periodicals director in the Tulane Office of University Relations, volunteered to set the text into type, using a desktop publishing program and a laser printer. Will Andrews and I are truly grateful for the many hours she gave to the Tizimin volume, and we are delighted with the result. We thank the staff of University Relations for their help.

The present volume contains my morpheme concordance of the Book of Chilam Balam of Tizimin (the Chumayel concordance appears in Volume 59 of this series). I began with Edmonson's (1982) typed transcription of the Mayan text. Once this text had been entered on computer disk, I checked it with a photostatic copy in the Latin American Library at Tulane (the original manuscript is housed in the Museo Nacional de Antropología in Mexico City [Edmonson 1982:xi]). To prepare it for incorporation in the concordance, I then identified and separated with hyphens or spaces all the morphemes in the text, using the global editing and substitution features of Programma's Apple Pie Word Processing System. The programs used to create the concordance were written in the SNOBOL language.

The Book of Chilam Balam of Tizimin consists of twenty-seven folios, of which one is missing (9r-9v). It is closely written in a single hand, except for some marginal notes of apparent mid-nineteenth-century date (Edmonson 1982:xiii). Although the manuscript refers to events covering a time span of about thirteen hundred years (Edmonson 1982), several grammatical features, such as the form of the first person plural prefix and the frequency of the intransitive perfective suffix, clearly point to the late eighteenth century as the date of the extant copy.

The transcription conforms as closely as possible to the original, except for the use of uppercase letters. No attempt has been made to restore missing letters, to correct spelling errors, nor to regularize the orthography. Illegible words or portions of the text damaged beyond recognition have been marked by ellipses. The concordance, like the original manuscript, uses the colonial alphabet devised for Yucatec Maya by the Spanish priests, with five exceptions. To facilitate data processing by computers, I have substituted "DZ" for "ȝ," "CH'" for "c̄h̄," "NY" for "ñ" "TH" for "t̄h̄," and "YETEL" for the abbreviation "y̱."

For ease of reference, the Mayan text has been divided into numbered lines corresponding to either clauses or phrases. Each line of text is introduced by a nine-column code. An abbreviation of the name of the manuscript (TIZ) appears in the first three columns; a hyphen separates it from the line number, which is represented by a four-digit code. If a line is too long to fit into one row of the concordance, a letter follows the last digit in column 9. In the following example, the letter "A" in the last column of the code indicates that it continues into the next row:

TIZ-0188A MA T-U-KIN U-TI-AL A-MAH-AN KOH

If some letter other than "A" appears in that column, it means that it is the continuation of the line in the previous row:

TIZ-0127B T-U-TEP-AL T-U-HUN-AL

If a line of text does not spill over into the next row, the last column of the code is empty:

TIZ-0057 BULUC CH'AB TAN U-MEHEN AH-UUC-EB

The complete text, with its line numbers, follows the concordance and the morpheme lists and counts. The morpheme counts are shown in both alphabetic and frequency order. A concordance of my line numbers with those employed by Edmonson (1982) appears at the end of the volume.

Each row of the concordance is divided into four basic fields. The first field contains the code that has already been described. The target morpheme is centered in the third field, with its associated prefixes and suffixes separated from it by a hyphen and at least one space. Other words in the row appear in the second and fourth fields. The morphemes are alphabetized in the following order: A, B, C, CH, CH', D, DZ, E, F, G, H, I, J, K, L, M, N, O, P, PP, S, T, TH, TZ, U, V, X, Y.

The concordance lists every number and morpheme in the text, including words of Spanish and Nahuatl origin. Numbers precede letters in the alphabetic listing.
